ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Any volume of edited texts implies debts to the custodians and owners of the documents that are reproduced and I have acknowledged those debts at appropriate points in the volume. I am particularly grateful to Ian Chard for giving me access to documents in his possession, which helped me with dating the 1553 survey of Barton Regis, and for sharing with me the early findings of his work on the early modern topography of Stapleton and Mangotsfield. I would also like to thank the staff of the various organisations, the archivists, librarians, receptionists and administrative staff, who have helped me in my researches. They include the staff of the Bristol Record Office, the Bristol Central Reference Library, the Gloucestershire Record Office, the Kent Local History Centre and the National Archives. Dr Kate Harris welcomed me to Longleat and David Smith provided help on the Berkeley muniments. I am grateful to them all.

I owe particular debts to Professor Roger Leech, who started me on this work by introducing me to the 1553 survey of Barton Regis, and to Professor Jonathan Barry, who has provided much needed advice on the early modern period for an editor who has strayed beyond her historical comfort zone. Dr Joe Bettey has given me the benefit of his great knowledge of the history of the locality and Dr Madge Dresser and Dr Jonathan Harlow have encouraged and supported me throughout. I have benefitted from conversations with Professor Edmund King and Dr C. P. Lewis, both authors of distinguished local studies on other areas, and Professor Richard Coates has been generous with his expertise on place names. Professor David Crouch has shared with me some thoughts on the earls of Gloucester and advised on reading sixteenth-century hands.

I would like to thank them warmly, but most of all I should thank my ever patient husband, Ray Thompson, who has accompanied me on long walks around the obscurer parts of east Bristol, has photographed my manuscripts and listened to my findings.

INTRODUCTION

The history of east Bristol has not been as intensively studied as other areas of the city, yet the importance of the area in the city’s development is beyond doubt. It was both the location of the king’s manor of Barton, on which the city was founded, and the area where a diversity of industries emerged that enabled the city to withstand the decline of its mercantile and commercial interests in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.¹ The documents printed in this volume relate to that area as it was in the middle of the sixteenth century at a period of great social and economic change, when the royal connection with the manor was severed and a new pattern of ownership emerged. They focus on the district to the east of the medieval city, when it was still a rural area, continuing to practise medieval approaches to farming in common fields, and they enable us to reconstruct long disappeared topography and landscape use at the point when the foundations of the modern suburbs began to be laid.

The setting

The area that lay to the east of the medieval city and county of Bristol was the location of the king’s manor of the barton. It stretched from the eastern limits of the city to the king’s wood northwards to the parish boundary with Horfield and Stoke Gifford and its southernmost point was the king’s marsh that lay in a great loop of the River Avon. The primary meaning of the word “barton” in Old English is a threshing floor, but by the central middle ages it had come to mean an area where the land was for the lord’s use, often adjacent to his dwelling. The word still survives in the Bristol street name St James Barton, which refers to the barton belonging to the priory of St James, or Thurstan’s Barton, off Whitehall Road, and it is also used in one of the documents presented in this volume to describe Thomas Tovey’s holding at Mangotsfield, where there was a “dwelling housse barne oxehousse garden orchard and barton”. Since the lord who kept this area for his own use was the king, the manor came to be called Barton Regis, although it was also known as Barton nexte or nighe Brystowe. There was, however, another royal manor outside Gloucester, King’s Barton, which has often been confused with Barton Regis.² This association with the king probably led to the fanciful name of the Royal Table public house, which stood from the 1840s until 2007 on Barton Hill Road, Bristol.

It would be incorrect, however, to equate the geographical area to the east of Bristol with the manor of Barton Regis; a manor was not necessarily a bloc of territory, and other smaller manors existed within this geographical area. The manor of Blacksworth, for example, has been described elsewhere and two surveys associated with Ridgeway are published in this volume. A manor has recently been defined as Small-scale pieces of landed property, embedded in vertical dependent relationships both up and down the scale. Upwards, the owners or holders of manors owed obligations of very diverse kinds to their lords. Downwards, they themselves were owed obligations, again varied in character, by peasants and servants. Manors were further characterized by a bipartite division in the use of land between demesne (seigneurial land) and tenanted land, and by seigneurial command of resources from both parts, whether in the form of produce, cash rents, other dues or labour. Finally, manors came to include jurisdiction, exercised formally in the manor court by the lord.

Manors were dynamic units and their lords could assign them to others or alienate parts of them. Margaret Sharp has traced in outline such changes in the manor of Barton Regis, beginning with its origins as an Anglo-Saxon royal estate. She shows how the manor of the barton at Bristol eventually became known as Barton Regis and, after being assigned to various administrative divisions of the county of Gloucestershire, known as hundreds, eventually became a hundred of its own with associated administrative and juridical functions. Three local settlements at Easton, Stapleton and Mangotsfield became the focal points of “tithings”, originally groups of ten households answerable for one another’s conduct at the hundred court. At some point in the twelfth or early thirteenth century half of Mangotsfield was granted away from the manor, was inherited by the Blount family and in the sixteenth century was in the possession of the Lords Berkeley. During the fifteenth century the priory of St James alienated part of its freeholdings to the east of Bristol, which came to be known as the manor of Ridgeway and whose name survives in the modern Ridgeway Road running between Fishponds Road and Lodge Causeway. It was inherited by the Seymour family before it was sold on, eventually ending up with the Berkeleys of Stoke Gifford and the Smyths of Long Ashton.

On many occasions during the middle ages, the queen consort drew income from Bristol castle or the Barton, and it was perhaps this precedent that led Henry VIII to grant the revenues of Barton Regis to his last wife, Katherine Parr, the former Lady Latimer, in 1544, as he had granted them to his previous wives, Catherine of Aragon, ...
Introduction

and Anne of Cleves. Queen Katherine died in 1549 and her stepson, Edward VI, granted Barton Regis to her brother-in-law, William Herbert, later earl of Pembroke, a man who “played the property market as a hobby, buying, selling and exchanging land with the crown, until even he lost track of what was his.” Although Pembroke was to hold the office of Steward of Bristol and Constable of the castle, his main interests lay in Wiltshire, and he quickly sold the manor on to Sir Maurice Dennys (c.1516–63), a member of a Gloucestershire family with property at Dyrham and Siston, for whom he may have been acting throughout. Sir Maurice was an ambitious man, with an extensive property portfolio centred on the great house that he was building at Siston Court, but he encountered political difficulties under Queen Mary and he died before he was able to rebuild his fortunes under Queen Elizabeth.

After his death his brother, Sir Walter Dennys and nephew Richard were obliged to make a series of sales to satisfy Sir Maurice’s debts and redeem the mortgage Sir Maurice had taken out on Siston. The property in Mangotsfield was dispersed over a number of years and the holdings in the other two tithings of Stapleton and Easton were sold as two blocks. Richard Berkeley secured lands and woods in Stapleton where he created the Stoke Park estate and built the house known to later Bristolians as the Dower House or Duchess’s. It was therefore a much diminished manor of Barton Regis, broadly consisting of lands in St Philip’s parish and the rights associated with the court of the administrative division or hundred, which was purchased by Thomas Chester in 1564. Chester was a member of a local mercantile family that had held high office in Bristol; his father William was mayor in 1537 and 1552 and Thomas and his father were engaged in the wine trade from the 1540s. Thomas himself became MP for the city in 1563, and by the 1560s was wealthy enough to purchase a country estate at Almondsbury, as well as making his investment in Barton Regis. According to Chester family tradition the contract for the latter involved a marriage between Thomas’ son, William, and Richard Dennys’ daughter, Katherine, and the Chesters were to retain the lordship until the family died out in the eighteenth century.

By 1600 a much more fragmented pattern of landholding had replaced the single manor of Barton Regis, particularly in Mangotsfield and the area known as Kingswood heath or the chase of Kingswood. In the latter area the woodland formerly associated with the barton was divided up into liberties, assigned to the individuals who now held parts of the old manor of Barton Regis or whose predecessors had had a claim on the woodlands. In the late 1560s the liberties were held by Richard Berkeley (Stapleton), Lord Berkeley (Mangotsfield) Thomas Chester (Barton Regis), John Lacey (Hanhams Abbots), Henry Newton (Hanhams), Edmond Weston (Bitton) and Robert Wykes (Siston) and descended to their successors. As the sixteenth century drew to its close local entrepreneurs like Arthur Player identified the area’s potential and it became increasingly important for extractive industries such as coal mining and clay pits, with the crown continuing to assert claims to the mineral rights of Kingswood well into the seventeenth century.

The documents
The records presented in this volume are not the earliest documents to survive from the area to the east of the medieval city of Bristol. Those are the reeve’s and bailiff’s accounts of the manor of Barton Regis, dating from the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, which can be found in the National Archives, as would be expected of the archival legacy of the royal manor that Barton Regis had been during the middle ages. There is also an extent of the manor of Barton Regis dating from 1402 that was calendared in an early Index Society publication. The documents printed here date from the period when the manor passed out of royal control, and they are now in the care of a number of repositories, reflecting the partition of the lands of the manor among various owners from the mid sixteenth century onwards. A detailed description of each manuscript is given as an introduction before its transcription.

The first item is the statement of the customs of the manor of Barton Regis, which is taken from the record of a court of survey held in Barton Regis in May 1553. The record of the court of survey forms part of the Chester Master collection at the GRO (MS GRO D674a/M24) and excerpts appear by kind permission of Mr W. Chester Master.

The second item is a survey of the manor of Barton Regis to be found in Kent Record Office (MS Kent U269/M84), among the papers of the Sackville family of Knole in Kent, which probably dates from the 1550s. This survey records 142 property holdings, mostly copy holdings, while the court of survey record (MS GRO D674a/M24) records only 83. The 83 entries which occur in both the court roll (MS GRO D674a/M24) and the survey (MS Kent U269/M84) differ only in minor details, usually of spelling or scribal error. These variations are shown in the footnotes of the second item and the transcript also indicates the entries which do not appear in court roll (MS GRO D674a/M24). The relationship between these two records is explored below in the section on making a survey. The Sackville survey has been edited with the kind permission of Kent Archives.

The third document is a rental roll for “Barton Hundrethe, Sta Bullton and Mangotsfyllld” dated 1563 and therefore produced during the ownership of Sir Maurice Dennys. It is held by the BRO (MS BRO 99/1) with whose kind permission it appears in this volume.

The fourth section contains two surveys of the manor of Ridgeway, one made for the Seymour family, probably in the 1530s (MS Longleat, Seymour papers vol. XII, 15)

Finally there is a document from the National Archives (MS TNA E 133/1/87) which contains the depositions made in favour of Thomas Chester, the defendant in a case brought by the Crown at the court of the Exchequer in 1569. The six deponents or witnesses answer seven questions about the extent of the manor of Barton Regis and the rights that the tenants of that manor had in the king’s wood.

For ease of reference each holding in the Barton Regis survey has been assigned a running number for each tithing, starting S for Stapleton, M for Mangotsfield and E for Easton. Each entry in the 1563 rental roll has been assigned a running number beginning with R. Entries in the Ridgeway surveys have been numbered [RGL1-10] and [RGS1-8]. Each deponent’s testimony in the 1569 case has been numbered [D1-D6] with a reference to the number of the interrogatory or question [D1.2]. The customs of the manor were numbered by the scribe and the letter C has been added.

Documents continued to be produced by the court of Barton Regis after 1600, many of which are now held with the Chester Master papers in Gloucester, including a court book for the period 1608–1615. The continuation of this record for 1615–1624, which is entitled on its front cover “Booke 2d”, is held by BRO. It was acquired through the agency of J. E. Pritchard, President of the Bristol and Gloucestershire Archaeological Society (1918–20), along with other materials related to Barton Regis, including a survey of 1690–1703. It is unclear how the documents came into Pritchard’s possession, but they may have passed to Handel Cossham, when he bought the manorial rights from the Chester Masters family, and thence into antiquarian circles in the city.

The social and legal context of the documents

In many ways these documents reveal social and economic structures that were disintegrating. The documents are, for the most part, reflections of the medieval institutions of the hundred, the manor and its court, and so they provide a description of the pattern of landholding east of the city of Bristol in the mid sixteenth century, but not the activities of those who worked the land or who made their living in other ways. They are, however, the best sources that are available for East Bristol in the mid sixteenth century and they are valuable for the insights they provide on a period in which medieval conditions can still be glimpsed, while the foundations of the modern landscape were being laid.

The documents still use the terminology of the middle ages. They are rooted in a society, dominated by the manor, a social and economic construct that enabled the elite to exploit the resources of the land and the labour of the rural population. The manor existed for the benefit of its lord, who retained for his own use some of its agricultural lands (the demesne), while claiming rents and labour services from his tenants, as well as exclusive rights in other resources such as woodland, minerals and fishing rights. It is on the exercise of the rights over woodland and minerals that the 1569 case concerning the King’s wood turned, for the witnesses asserted in their depositions that the lord of Barton Regis had always allowed his tenants to gather wood for fuel and to receive timber for the repair of property within the manor. By implication therefore the woods were part of the manor and not part of a royal forest, over which the crown could claim authority.

Within the manor there were free tenants who paid a nominal rent and acknowledged the lord of the manor by their obligation to “perform suit” or attend the manor court. The holdings of these tenants are not itemised in the documents presented in this volume and have to be reconstructed from other sources, but the 1563 rental roll indicates how much some of them paid. The holdings that are described in detail are those of the tenants who held their land by the lord’s will and the custom of the manor, and for that reason they are sometimes known as “customary” tenants. Most of the customary tenants were copyholders, so-called because the details of their holding were recorded on the court roll at the point when it was assigned, and a copy of the entry on the court roll was given to the tenant. At Barton Regis copyhold normally involved tenure for three lives, usually those of the original grantee, his wife and eldest child, though many other family and business permutations are present in the survey.

Copyhold tenures emerged in the fifteenth century from the villeinage holdings of the central middle ages. Traditional peasant holdings were about thirty acres and were known as virgates or yardlands. They could be divided into half virgates and cottage tenements could be smaller. In the Sackville survey of Barton Regis yardlands are only mentioned in connection with certain holdings, which suggests that the system of assessment was beginning to break down. In total the survey assigns ten yardlands to Easton tithing, ten to Stapleton and five to Mangotsfield, the latter reflecting the fact that half the manor of Mangotsfield was in the hands of the Blount family. Yardlands do not appear at all in the Ridgeway surveys.

In the Sackville survey of the manor of Barton Regis each messuage, tenement or cottage is described in some detail, beginning with an account of the homestead. This usually consisted of a dwelling house and barn within a plot of land of between a half and one acre, sometimes called a curtalge. Some holdings also possessed outhouses, cowsheds, a bakehouse, stables or a hayhouse. Within the curtalge there was often an orchard and garden, which contributed to the holder’s domestic economy. After the description of the homestead the Sackville survey itemises the associated lands but the Ridgeway surveys rarely describe a homestead and their entries are usually descriptions of parcels of land. Arable lands lay in named open fields, sometimes in as many as six or more different locations in units as small as an acre or a number of ferendells. An acreage and value is given for units of arable land. Pasture often lay in closes or leazes and it would have been fenced to prevent stock escaping. Again, acreage and value are given. Meadow was also listed by value and in acres. These elements were not always itemised in the same order. The yearly rental of the holding is given, along with the names of the individuals for whose lives the copyhold will last and the date when the copy was issued.

Earlier in the middle ages these tenures had often brought obligations to perform services, such as ploughing or reaping on the lord’s lands, or to render additional dues. It became difficult to enforce these obligations, however, when labour became scarce in the mid fourteenth century after the Black Death and there is no trace of services in the Sackville survey of Barton Regis, although the additional dues are represented by payments for hens and eggs that were survivals of the traditional Christmas and Easter gifts to the medieval lord. The Longleat survey of Ridgeway makes reference to services, but does not specify them and the customs of the manor mention that cottages are not “serviseable” [C13]. The surveys do provide evidence however of the ways in which land holdings were regrouped and reallocated to take account of falling population after the Black Death. There are examples of holdings where the buildings have decayed or fallen into “ruen” and sometimes there is no dwelling associated with the holding. It is likely that the emergence of the manor of Ridgeway at the turn of the fourteenth and fifteenth century was itself an indication of the change associated with decreased population. Faced with the decline in labour services, St James Priory seems to have leased its freehold lands in the manor of Barton Regis, for the Ridgeway holdings are mostly parcels of land and dwellings can only be inferred in six of the eighteen itemised holdings.22

Technically copyholders, as successors of the villeins, were not free and were completely under the authority of the lord of the manor, exercised through his court. A death duty or heriot was payable when a tenant died, before the heir named on his copy could succeed to the land, and the 1569 Ridgeway survey itemises some heriots that were payable. The lord’s court, the so-called “court baron”, was held every three weeks to settle disputes and to admit new tenants; the court leet was held less frequently to take view of frankpledge, when all the residents of a tithing stood surety for the behaviour of their fellows and it also had some criminal jurisdiction. The customs of Barton Regis indicate that such “law days” were held there twice yearly 23 and court record books survive from a later period.24 While the free tenants also had access to the king’s court, the copyholders in theory did not. From the early years of the sixteenth century, however, these arrangements began to be challenged; the common law courts started to consider cases concerning copyhold tenure as well as matters that would earlier have been settled in a manorial court. In the early 1540s, for example, a dispute between husbandmen about access to arable holdings through the Purdown field was taken to the court of Chancery by Richard Hoddes and other Stapleton residents.25

The legal status of the copyholder appears therefore at first sight to be unenviable, but the conditions of their land tenure were regulated by the customs of the manor in which they lived. The customs of Barton Regis, which appear at the beginning of the court of survey record, now in the GRO, form the first item in this collection of documents. Collections of customs like these had had their origins in the agreements about services owed to the lord of the manor, which had been negotiated in the manor courts and recorded in the court rolls. They were a valuable source of protection for the tenants, and it was often the lords that took cases to the common law courts to challenge them.26 The Barton Regis customs provide details of how the copyhold grants are to be made in open court for a specified number of lives, the heriot or death tax, and the arrangements for succession by the heir. The customs recognise that a copyholder may let his holding; they cover the circumstances that will lead to forfeiture, and they provide for the maintenance of the buildings from the resources of the manor. Activities necessary for the practice of communal agriculture, such as drives to round up straying livestock and uses of common pasture and woodland are also covered. Individuals could be fined for infringements of the common agricultural practice of the manor and for other minor offences, and in Barton Regis, as the preamble to the customs makes clear, moral offences were handled in the court.

This codification of the customs of Barton Regis is likely to have been their first written expression, formulated at the point when the manor was passing into new hands. There is some defensiveness to the insistence on ancient custom and the uncertainty about the final element relating to mineral rights suggests that the jurors were not in command of the detail; they are likely to have been more familiar with husbandry. Nonetheless the jurors had several items of case law to report, which are recorded as marginal additions. It is interesting therefore that by the time the second survey, now held by Kent Local History Centre, was compiled, the customs had been edited. The three introductory paragraphs mentioning Queen Katherine, the operation of the courts baron and leet, and the status as an ecclesiastical peculiar are repeated in the second survey, but the seventeen customs that were recorded in 1553 are reduced to four brief points. There is reference to the three lives on the copy and to practice with respect to heriot, and there is an entirely new proviso, which did not appear in the 1553 customs, that a widow may continue to hold, if she is named on the copy. Finally [C]9 mentions the tenants’ right to timber for repair of their houses and for hedging purposes and for fuel. While the Barton Regis customs are by no means as extensive as those gathered on the bishop of Hereford’s estates by Swythune Butterfield in 1581, they represent a substantial body of custom and practice that protected the interests of the copyholder, providing considerable security of tenure.27

In practice, in fact, the copyholders were often substantial agricultural proprietors, who were the backbone of village society, and there was nothing to prevent tenants from holding by copy at another manor. Barton Regis tenants, such as James Fawcett and Robert Corye, can be found holding land of the manor of Ridgeway and of St James Priory.28 It was the copy holders’ rents and the fines exacted in the court that made up most of the revenues from Barton Regis, and the lord of the manor or his agents needed to manage those manorial proceeds carefully. As a result surveys and rent rolls, such as those published here, were made so that the lord had the information that would enable him to maximise the yield of the manor. The fines that were chargeable as one copyholder died and was succeeded by another were subject to renegotiation and potential increase, and some tenancies are specified as being at the lord’s will only or for one life, enabling rent increases.29

The 1563 rental roll provides evidence of how holdings changed and also of the rate at which tenancies changed hands, and there are examples in the survey

29 R. H. Tawney linked the change during the early modern period from copyhold to leasehold tenure to growing insecurity for peasant proprietors and the rise of agrarian capitalism in his important study, The Agrarian Problem in Sixteenth Century England (London: Longmans, Green, 1912). The current state of research is summarised in Landlords and tenants, ed. Whittle.
of copyholdings that were held by merchants and gentlemen, who must then have sublet to tenants that worked the land. The market in land for investment can be illustrated by the holdings of the smith’s wife, Elizabeth Dole [R136]. In 1538 two acres of meadow in the King’s marsh had been granted to Thomas Dole, for the lives of himself, his wife Elizabeth and daughter, Joan, [E62] and Elizabeth’s will demonstrates that the family had no links with the countryside. Thomas Dole was an urban smith, domiciled in the parish of St Peter’s in the city of Bristol, where Elizabeth expected to be buried near her husband. They had invested in property in the city, including leases, as well as in a further four acres of meadow that was left to Elizabeth’s son, Ralph.30 In short, a copyhold tenure was an economic opportunity for those with the skills to exploit it and it is clear that sixteenth-century copyholders were often more than simple peasant proprietors.

It was not uncommon for courts of survey to be held to review the rights that made up a manor, when a new lord assumed lordship, either by purchase or by inheritance. Such surveys are described by John Fitzherbert in his Boke of Surveying, the first printed book on the subject, which appeared in 1523.31 The Seymour survey of the manor of Ridgeway appears to be just such a survey, taken by John Berwick, the receiver general of the Seymour property. While medieval manorial practice had been for a manorial official to take the survey, however, it was becoming increasingly common by the mid-sixteenth century for a professional surveyor to be engaged.

The survey of Barton Regis, recorded in MS GRO D674a/M24, was taken in May 1553 and by that date, despite the reference in the customs of the manor to “our soveraign lord the king’s majestie” the manor was in the possession of William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, who had been granted it by Edward VI in April 1553.32 Pembroke was a member of the Privy Council, who had served Henry VIII and retained his position in Edward’s reign. Described by a modern commentator as a “shrewd and steady politician” who had “built a fortune from nothing”, Pembroke was married to the sister of Henry VIII’s last queen, Katherine Parr, and had done well from the Dissolution of the Monasteries, securing the lands of Wilton Abbey and extensive interests in Wales and Wiltshire.33 He was well-informed and well-connected, and he adopted this more up-to-date practice of employing a lawyer, Geoffrey Danyell (c.1516–1558/61), formerly surveyor to Henry VIII’s queens, Anne of Cleves and Katherine Parr.

Pembroke may have known his surveyor either from Danyell’s connection with the earl’s sister-in-law, Queen Katherine, or because Danyell, like Pembroke, had interests in Wiltshire. He secured property in Marlborough in the lively property market that had developed after the Dissolution of the Monasteries and was MP for Devizes in 1545.34 He also had his own connections with Bristol and was mentioned in the will of John White of Bristol, who had extensive property to the east of the city and may have recommended him to Pembroke or the steward, Henry Brayne.\textsuperscript{35} It is possible that Danyell was assisted by William Popley, Thomas Cromwell’s agent in Bristol in the late 1530s.\textsuperscript{36} Popley claimed that this was the case in his deposition for the 1569 lawsuit concerning Barton Woods, but it has to be said that his name appears nowhere in the survey.\textsuperscript{37} Nonetheless he was a Bristolian and well-informed about the area – he had received on the king’s behalf vestments and plate from the house of Austin Friars in Bristol on 10 September 1538, for example,\textsuperscript{38} and his local knowledge and connections would have made him useful to Danyell.

It is important however not to regard Danyell, who was a member of the Inner Temple, as a surveyor in the modern sense. The sixteenth century survey involved the examination of title and the recording of holdings, rents and boundaries rather than the use of surveyor’s instruments, which only began to develop in the seventeenth century, and there are no plans associated with these surveys as the modern mind expects. Danyell and Henry Brayne, the steward, will have convened the court of Barton Regis as a court of survey in the presence of the “most anncyente tenants”, both male and female.\textsuperscript{39} It was these men and women who would have described the “mets and bounds”\textsuperscript{40} of William Blunte’s considerable holdings in Mangotsfield [M1] and the physical location of the fishpool called Lyncombe that extended from the walled area of John Gerveys to the well called Clyvewell and from the well to the banke next William Blunte’s wall [M3]. The process, which was elegantly described in the early seventeenth century by John Norden in \textit{The Surveyor’s Dialogue} (1618), was a social and legal transaction rather than a technical activity.\textsuperscript{41} Nonetheless new standards of information on land were beginning to develop and the use of consultant surveyors, like Danyell, rather than manorial officials is a sign that the survey was beginning to be seen as a tool for enhancing the financial potential of the property.\textsuperscript{42}

It is interesting therefore that Matthew Smyth, himself a lawyer and member of the Middle Temple, should have chosen to take his own survey of the manor of Ridgeway in 1569. Although the purchase of land would make a gentleman of this younger son, he had the skills to undertake the important work of a survey and did so himself.

The deponents in the 1569 case about the Barton woods were asked specifically whether the manor of Barton Regis had been surveyed and their depositions provide valuable supplementary information. Thomas Bellingham deposed that the 1553 survey was made for the use of the earl of Pembroke, and William Popley declared that it was engrossed by Geoffrey Danyell and delivered to the earl. That court of survey was recorded in MS GRO D674a/M24. According to Thomas Bellingham [D4.6] a second survey was made at the request of Sir Maurice Dennys and it is presumably this second survey that can now be found among the Sackville papers in Maidstone (MS Kent U269/M84). Bellingham deposed that the second survey had been taken by Peter Morgan and William Popley in the reign of Queen Mary (1553– 58), and Popley’s own deposition \[D6.6\] asserts that he wrote it, but they disagree on its date. If the survey was taken in the reign of Queen Mary, as Bellingham declared, it must have been early in the reign, for Peter Morgan, who was heavily involved in speculation in the land market, spent a period in the Fleet prison for debt from December 1556.\(^{43}\) Popley, on the other hand, places it shortly before the expedition to Le Havre, which took place in 1562–3 \[D6.6\].\(^{44}\) Internal evidence from the survey, which records no copy holding with a date later than 1552, suggests that Popley had misremembered and that Bellingham’s date is more likely to have been correct.

While the original survey roll remained with the Barton Regis Court records and became part of the Chester Master archive, the Sackville survey was probably made as a working copy for use by Sir Maurice Dennys, or his steward. It is far easier to handle than the court roll, as it is in codex form. The contents have been supplemented by adding together the total proceeds that could be derived from each holding and this figure appears in the right hand margin. For each holding there are summaries giving acreages of arable, pasture and mead, while the material on the free tenants and the customs of the manor has been summarised, presumably because there was less profit for the lord of the manor from that source. Used in conjunction with the 1563 rental it would have enabled Sir Maurice to manage the Barton Regis property to maximum financial effect.

The Ecclesiastical landscape
In the middle ages the administrative division or hundred of Barton Regis lay in the diocese of Worcester and from 1542 that of Bristol, but it was not subject to the authority of the local bishop;\(^{45}\) it was an ecclesiastical peculiar and the customs of the manor assert that the practical outcome was that wills were proved by the steward \[C11\]. The continuation of this custom for the rest of the sixteenth century is suggested by the records of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, for while nearly 600 sixteenth-century wills from Bristol are now to be found in the National Archives, only one, dating from 1594, gives Barton Regis or Barton hundred as the place of residence.\(^{46}\) Similarly there is only one will from sixteenth-century Stapleton, but five from Mangotsfield, perhaps because ties were looser as a result of the Berkeley tenure of half the manor. In contrast there are more than thirty seventeenth-century wills from Barton Regis at the National Archives, twenty six from Stapleton and thirty six from Mangotsfield. From the 1590s some wills were proved in the Bristol Consistory Court, mostly of individuals who described themselves as resident in St Philip’s, but three referred to Barton hundred. One was the gentleman, Francis Dennys, who was perhaps a freeholder, and another, Richard Manning, a pewterer, who may have held no land. The third, Robert Risby, wished to be buried at St Peter’s in the city and had a house in St Mary-le-Port Street, but perhaps had aspired to gentlemanly status because he had another house at Dendridge within Kingswood Chase.\(^{47}\)

The area was served by three parish churches; two were located within the hundred of Barton Regis at Stapleton and Mangotsfield, the third, dedicated to St Philip and St Jacob, lay outside it and within the city of Bristol. No major religious foundation was made on the manor, although the holdings of religious communities in the city of Bristol can still, despite the Dissolution of the Monasteries in the 1530s, be traced in the documents presented in this volume. The parish church of St Philip and St Jacob is mentioned twice in the Barton Regis survey, in both cases as a locator of property – the pasture and meadow holdings of two tenants are described as being behind the church. Mangotsfield church performs the same function in locating the meadow that Robert Arden held between his house at Hillhouse and the church. St Philip and St Jacob was the oldest of the Barton Regis parish churches and first appears in records in the late twelfth century.\(^48\) C.S. Taylor speculates that it may have been founded in the early twelfth century, when the building of the castle prevented easy access to St Peter’s church for those living in the area now known as Old Market.\(^49\) William Worcester is the source for the story that St Philip and St Jacob was once a Benedictine monastery, but it is more likely that monks from Tewkesbury lived and worshipped on the site while the new priory of St James was being established, leaving a persistent memory of their presence. St Philip’s dedication may have been amended to include the name of Jacob (Jacobus meaning James in Latin) when it was given to the priory.

St James’ Priory was, by far, the most important ecclesiastical landholder in Barton Regis and the descent of its lands, after the Dissolution of the Monasteries, was very influential on the development of the area to the east of Bristol. It was founded in the twelfth century by Earl Robert of Gloucester, the illegitimate son of King Henry I (1100–35), who had endowed monks from his wife’s family foundation, the abbey of Tewkesbury, with local lands and property. At the beginning of the sixteenth century the priory held the parish churches of Mangotsfield and Stapleton and the Valor Ecclesiasticus, a survey of the revenues of the church requested by Henry VIII in 1535, indicates that the priory received £2 13s and £2 respectively from Stapleton and Mangotsfield, perhaps suggesting that Stapleton was the more heavily populated settlement. St James also received rents from Barton hundred to the value of £9 12s 2d. The priory’s lands were seized by the crown at the Dissolution and sold; by the 1550s they had passed to Henry Brayne [E67], but they were not to be the foundation of a gentry estate, as many other ecclesiastical landholdings would be. Brayne’s son died without an heir and the property was divided between Brayne’s daughters, Anne and Emilythys.\(^50\)

In his description of his journeys around England and Wales in the late 1530s and early 1540s Leland claimed that the cloister of a nunnery still stood at Mangotsfield, but no other authority for this foundation has been found, and it may be that Leland

This would seem to be St Philip and St Jacob’s church with the first part of its dedication suppressed and, if Bishop Simon had confirmed it to Tewkesbury, then it was founded in the first half of the twelfth century, English Episcopal Acta 34: Worcester, 1186–1218, ed. The site of its lands now lies on the left directly after Lawrence Hill passes over the former Midland railway, now the Bristol to Bath footpath. It was already in existence in the late twelfth century and received a charter from King John in 1208.\footnote{Rotuli Chartarum in Turri Londinensi Asservati, 1199–1216, ed. T. D. Hardy (London: HMSO, 1837), 175b.} From 1465 it had been under the supervision of the College of Westbury and the hospital’s lands therefore passed into lay ownership when the college was dissolved in the mid 1540s.\footnote{“Hospitals: Bristol”, VCH Gloucestershire, vol. 2, no. 33: The hospital of Saint Lawrence, Bristol, 118–19.} Westbury’s property was bought by Sir Ralph Sadler, the well-connected former protégé of Thomas Cromwell, although the Sackville survey records that “certayne lands and tenements freely late belonging to Colledge of Westburye” were held by the heirs of John fitz James, former recorder of Bristol, attorney general to Henry VIII and Lord Chief Justice until 1539.\footnote{Nicholas Orme and Jon Cannon, Westbury-on-Trym: Monastery, Minster and College (BRS 62, 2010), 104.} Sadler’s family were certainly still in possession in the early seventeenth century, though the 1563 rent roll records “Saynt Larenc’ court” was rendering 2s 8d in rent to the lord of Barton Regis, apparently by the hand of the widow Sibyl Fawcett [R150] and it may be that an exchange or division of property had taken place when it was secularised.\footnote{Way, “Heath House”, 25.}

The Hospital of St Bartholomew, which stood on the north bank of the Frome near the present site of Christmas Steps held property called Little Horfield, better known today by its later name of Heath House. By the mid sixteenth century the lands had been secured by a merchant called Robert Thorne, who wished to use them to found a grammar school. His death brought the property into the hands of his son, who appears among the free tenants in the Barton Regis survey.\footnote{BRO 4984/5 Compotus of Ralph Sadleir’s lands in Worcestershire and Gloucestershire 1564; GRO D4431/1/A2/1 indicates that a descendant of Ralph Sadler leased property to Robert Hooke in 1629/30.}

Finally there were two chapels. A small chapel dedicated to St Anthony was linked with a freehold sold to Edward Tynte in 1554.\footnote{BRO 6685 (1).} The associated holding was not large – a few acres of arable, two closes that had been leased, less than ten acres of meadow and pasture, together with rights to commons and woodland – and had come to the vendor’s family by marriage. It may be therefore that the chapel was the holding of a knightly family and was intended for domestic use. Licences for such chapels had been issued from the twelfth century onwards, including one for a chapel at Mangotsfield.\footnote{CPR, Edward III, vol. XI, 1358–61 (London: HMSO, 1911), 569–70 preserves the text of a licence granted to William de Putot, sheriff of Gloucestershire in the 1220s and 1230s for a chapel in his court (curia sua) at Mangotsfield for the use of his household and guests (familie sue et hospitum suorum).} This was probably the chapel of St Ethelbert which had been leased by the prior of St James to Edmund Arthur in 1523 for a rent of 40s.\footnote{Descriptive Catalogue of the Charters and Muniments in the Possession of the Rt. Ridgeway
Our earliest glimpse of an area called Ridgeway to the east of Bristol dates from 1396 when the merchant and burgess William Canynges left a legacy for repairing the road between Lawford’s gate and Ridgeway. In 1412 two clerks, Nicholas Barstaple and William Rice, were making plans to use a substantial block of property there, consisting of a messuage, a carucate of land, 12 acres of meadow, 20 acres of pasture and 16 acres of wood, to endow the Hospital of the Holy Trinity at Lawford’s Gate. In that year they secured royal permission to give the hospital the reversion of this property, which was, at the time, held for his lifetime by a Bristol merchant, Mark William, who was later Mayor and Member of Parliament for Bristol, and his wife, Agnes. The two clerks intended that the property should be used to support a chaplain who would celebrate daily service in the chapel of the hospital, but the plan was evidently not fulfilled because Ridgeway can next be traced in the accounts of the Seymour family of Wolf Hall in the 1530s and it is a survey from the collection of Seymour papers, now at Longleat House, that is presented in this volume.

It would seem therefore that, on the deaths of Mark William and his wife, their heirs did not surrender the holding. The Seymour family had become the heirs because Isabel, Mark William’s only surviving child, had married Sir John Seymour of Wolf Hall, and so the passage of the Ridgeway property into the hands of the Seymour family is clear. The origins of what became known as the manor of Ridgeway are less clear, because the identity of those who let the property to Mark William is unknown. The joint holding by Agnes and Mark William suggests that it may actually have been her property, perhaps part of the dower from her first marriage. The will of her first husband, William Solers, survives and mentions a tenement at Goseham, which is to be sold for the benefit of William Solers’ soul. Perhaps the sale took place, but there are references to Goseham in the two Ridgeway surveys, suggesting that Agnes, who was an executor of the will, retained it. Alternatively the grant may have been a copyhold for the lives of Mark, Agnes and their son, Robert, who died young. Indeed the manor of Ridgeway as it was later held by the Seymour family and described in the survey at Longleat may have been made up of property held on tenures of both sorts, but it is significant that the Seymour survey mentions a payment for suit at the manor court of Barton Regis. This payment indicates that Ridgeway was not an ancient manor, but made up of property that was part of the manor of Barton Regis. In all likelihood it had slipped out of the control of the freeholder and there is a strong possibility that the freeholder was St James Priory in Bristol, a daughter house of the abbey of Tewkesbury, for the Seymour survey also makes clear that a chief rent of 14s was owed annually to the abbot of Tewkesbury. After the Dissolution the property that St James Priory had held locally came into the hands of the Brayne family and a deed of partition, dividing that property among the Brayne heirs in 1579, lists rents from Ridgeway and other property associated with the Seymours, indicating the links between this land and the priory.

64 Wadley, no. 125.
The Seymour family used the property that Isabel William had brought them as members of the elite often used property inherited in the female line – it became the holding of a younger son, Humphrey Seymour.\(^{66}\) He seems to have held all the family’s interests around Bristol at the end of the fifteenth century, although his main area of interest was in Oxfordshire.\(^{67}\) He married a wealthy widow, Anne Mountford, the widow of John Mountford, whose family were closely associated with the dukes of Buckingham.\(^{68}\) She may be the Lady Anne Seymour mentioned in the customs of the manor [marginal addition 1]. She is, however, there described as a widow and it is clear that a Humphrey Seymour left a widow, Margaret.\(^{69}\) It may therefore be the case that Humphrey and Anne Seymour had a son, Humphrey who married Margaret. By 1506 Margaret’s Seymour husband was dead, for she had remarried and her new husband, Richard Hiett, appears in both the military survey of 1522 and the lay subsidy rolls as one of the wealthier inhabitants of Stapleton.\(^{70}\) Margaret outlived her first husband by forty years and her jointure was still being paid when Ridgeway was sold in 1540 [RGL5, RGL10].\(^{71}\)

By 1540 the Seymours were no longer a knightly family of limited local influence, but found themselves close to the throne as a consequence of Henry VIII’s third marriage to Jane, daughter of Sir John Seymour, and the family chose to dispose of the isolated piece of property to the east of Bristol. In May of that year Jane’s brother, Edward, earl of Hertford, now the head of the family, sold Ridgeway to Henry White, a grocer of Bristol.\(^{72}\) Ridgeway remained in the White (also frequently spelt Whyte) family for about twenty years, descending to Henry White’s son, John, and after his death in 1558 it came onto the market again. White had left the bulk of his property to his sister, Sibyl, with the proviso that Ridgeway and his house in Bedminster should be sold to settle his debts.

By the late 1560s Ridgeway had come into the hands of Matthew Smyth and Richard Berkeley of Stoke Gifford. Smyth, the younger son of John Smyth, a Bristol merchant, had after a period at Oxford entered the Middle Temple. His objective in buying the property was presumably to set himself up as a landed proprietor and gentleman near to the city where his family had established itself. Richard Berkeley, a descendant of a younger branch of the Berkeleys of Berkeley, whose family had been established at Stoke Gifford for many generations, must have seen Ridgeway as a useful adjunct to the property he acquired in 1564 at Stapleton, where he built his fine new house. The subsequent history of Ridgeway can be read in the records of the Berkeley and Smyth families at the GRO and BRO.\(^{73}\)

The social order

The Barton Regis documents reveal a society of great diversity and complexity. At the apex was the king, who had been lord of the manor until 1553. He had often chosen to grant it to high status individuals; most recently, for example, Henry VIII had given it to three of his queens, while in the fifteenth century Henry V had granted it to his brother, Humphrey, duke of Gloucester.\(^74\) For the inhabitants of the manor however these were remote figures, whom they would not see, and it was the royal agents, who managed the property that were much more visible. The surveys can be used to recover the outline of that management and the men who undertook it, because they record when the copyholds were granted and often the name of the agent who granted it. As a result we can determine that for more than fifty years kings had looked to the local knightly family of the Poyntzs for the administration of Barton Regis, while the Seymours had relied on Richard Pheilps and John Berwick.

The earliest grant of copyhold recorded in the Sackville survey of Barton Regis took place in 1503, when the agent was Robert Poyntz. By 1525 he had been succeeded by his son, Anthony Poyntz, and in 1533 Nicholas Poyntz, representing the third generation of his family, was granting copyholds.\(^75\) The family was well-established at Iron Acton in Gloucestershire and had come to prominence under the Yorkist kings. Robert Poyntz had married the illegitimate daughter of Anthony Woodville, Earl Rivers, the brother of Edward IV’s queen Elizabeth, but had changed sides to become a partisan of Henry VII and was knighted on the field of Bosworth. It was a fortuitous change of direction, for Robert’s career was to thrive on office-holding. He became steward of the abbeys of St Augustine in Bristol and Kingswood in Gloucestershire, steward for the duke of Buckingham’s estate of Thornbury and sheriff of Gloucestershire, as well as steward of Barton Regis. In the years before his death in 1520, Robert Poyntz also had a role in the household of Henry VIII’s first queen, Catherine of Aragon. His son Anthony had made something of a name for himself as a sailor in the 1510s and was appointed sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1527. He was probably dead by October 1532, leaving his son Nicholas to take over at Barton Regis.

It was under Nicholas’ stewardship that nearly fifty of the copyholds were made between 1532 and 1544. Like his father and grandfather he was conspicuous for his role in the management of others’ property. He had been appointed joint keeper of Kingswood Forest with his father in 1531\(^76\) and steward of the bishop of Worcester’s lands in Gloucestershire from 1533–40, although there were complaints of mismanagement.\(^77\) It was alleged that “without the consent of his Lordship’s officers, and to his Lordship’s prejudice, [he] holds courts, and lets the lands, and takes fines at his pleasure. The tenants are much annoyed, and will pay no rent.” In 1535 he welcomed Henry VIII and his second queen, Anne Boleyn, to his property at Iron Acton, which had been newly built in the fashionable Renaissance style of the king and queen’s palace at Whitehall. Despite his marriage into the strongly Catholic Berkeley family, Nicholas seems to have supported and profited from the religious changes of the 1530s; he was a commissioner for the surrender of Kingswood Abbey.

in 1538 and purchased some of the lands. In the 1540s he enjoyed a successful military career in Scotland and France and in 1547 he was returned as MP for Gloucestershire.

The Poyntzs were knights then, the backbone of English royal administration. They knew and exploited the opportunities that office holding presented, and in the person of Nicholas they benefitted from the religious changes of Henry VIII’s reign. By 1550, however, Nicholas Poyntz was no longer presiding at the court of Barton Regis, having been replaced by Henry Brayne, and Brayne was an altogether new type of royal servant. Although his family origins lay in the Forest of Dean, he had been a merchant tailor in London in the 1540s and had accumulated sufficient capital for the outlay of £667 7s 6d in 1544 with which he bought the premises of St James Priory and its other interests in Bristol.78 He settled at St James in the prior’s house and dealt extensively in the land market; in 1546 he sold the tanner Roger Coke and his son a tenement with garden in St Philip’s that had formerly belonged to the Wiltshire priory of Bradenstoke, and in 1554 he granted a messuage, “le Graunge”, a cottage called Woodroves, and arable, pasture and meadow in Barton Regis to John Gonnyng.79 By the 1550s he was named in the commission of the peace in Gloucestershire.80

As well as acting as the administrator of Barton Regis, Brayne appears among the free tenants in the homage at the court of survey, and the other tenants are an interesting cross section of the old knightly elite, to which the Poyntz family belonged, and the new men, represented by Brayne. Sir John St Lo or Sentlowe (c.1501–59), whose family name survives at Newton St Loie, like Brayne, held lands formerly belonging to St James Priory, but he had not made his way through commerce. He was the son of Nicholas St Lo of Chew and benefitted from office holding. He was made steward of Thornbury and constable of Thornbury castle in 1528, was a Justice of the Peace in Gloucestershire from 1532 and sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1536–7. He married the daughter of Sir William Kingston and was thus the brother-in-law of Anthony Kingston, to whom St James Priory was initially granted after the Dissolution of the Monasteries.81 Sir Ralph Sadler (1507–87) on the other hand was very much a new man. An associate of Thomas Cromwell, appointed clerk to the hanaper of Chancery in 1535, MP, Principal Secretary and Privy Councillor in the 1540s, by 1547 he owned property in twenty-five counties in England and Wales. After the closure of the college at Westbury, he secured its lands and used the property as a residence.82

Below these grand men with connections to the court came the freeholders about whom less is known. One is described as an esquire – a man of an established family, ranking below a knight and sometimes described as an armiger. Hugh Brooke of Long Ashton was such a man; he was the great grandson of the merchant, Richard Ameryk, and grandson of a lawyer, the serjeant-at-law, Thomas Brooke.83 Another, Nicholas Thorne, was a member of a merchant family that would found a grammar school in Bristol, using the resources of St Bartholomew’s Hospital. Others are described as gentlemen or landholders, such as Hugh Kemys, Edward Tynte or John White or Whyte, whose father, Henry, had purchased the manor of Ridgeway from the Seymour family in 1540.

Below the freeholders came the copyholders, but it would be a mistake to see these people as a homogeneous group. The list of jurors on the court of survey roll arranges them carefully, placing first three men with the suffix, gent. The gentlemen were William Blunte, Edward Bassett and Stephen Cole. Blunte held two messuages, three yardlands (or peasant holdings) and two mills at Mangotsfield, together with more than 240 acres of pasture and arable. This was an enormous holding for the manor of Barton Regis and he had paid a fine of £40 in 1535. Edward Bassett was described as a servant of Nicholas Poyntz, which had perhaps enabled him to secure his holding of two tenements and a cottage at Downend for a rent of 13s 9d by paying a fine of £13 6s 8d, as well as the Lyncombe fishpond for an annual rent of 1d. Stephen Cole’s holdings were not on the same scale – there were only 30½ acres of arable, 2 acres of pasture and 4 acres of meadow, but the description of his ruined messuage implies that he, his wife, Katherine and daughter Joanna did not live on their copyhold property and must have sublet it. Like Edward Bassett, Stephen Cole was in the service of Nicholas Poyntz and was described as his steward.

The list of jurors then places seven men, whose holdings were considerably greater than the rest. James Fawcett held two messuages at Poyntz Pole and Sherles Smyth and two cottages in West Street, paying an annual rent of £7 13s. He also held three closes of pasture at Mangotsfield plus smaller holdings of mead and arable land in the King’s marsh. The Seymour survey shows him paying 14s for a further holding of three and a half acres at Pennywell. By 1563 he was dead but his wife, Sibyl, continued to run the business, paying rent for Hooper’s court and St Lawrence court, which were not in the family’s hands in 1553 and also for clay pits.

Gregory Price was placed directly after Fawcett. His family origins in Wales are reflected in that fact that his surname is usually rendered as ap Ryce (son of Rhys), but we do not know whether it was Gregory or an earlier member of his family that had come from Wales. He was well established by the 1520s however, and in 1524 he was sufficiently wealthy to be liable for 3s lay subsidy taxation, his goods having been valued at £6. He had held a tenement with a house and garden in the Easton tithing since 1520 and had increased them substantially in 1536, when the family took on Colly’s barn and another tenement, undertaking to pay a fine of £10 for both. Some of this property lay close to the eastern boundary of the city in the vicinity of the modern Pennywell Road and Barrow Road. With the proceeds of 3.5 acres of meadow, taken in 1543 for the lifetime of Gregory’s son, John, the family had an income of £9 5s 4d when the Barton Regis survey was compiled in 1553. By then Gregory was probably an old man; there were two lives left on his holdings, his own and his son’s, suggesting that Price’s wife had already died, and Gregory himself was dead by 1558. In that year, John Price, still calling himself ap Rysse, took advantage of Sir Maurice Dennys’s pressing need for money.

and purchased the family’s holdings, which were based in West Street, for £80.88 The 1563 rent roll therefore accounts only for the meadow that John had held since 1543.
Less than ten years later John’s son, William, entered the Inner Temple and it was he who finally secured outright possession of these properties from Maurice Dennys’s heir, Richard, in 1579.89 The Prices had thus moved from yeoman to the professional classes in three generations and before 1574 John Price had secured a grant of arms, making himself an armiger.90

Richard Hoddes had taken out his first tenancy in 1534 for the three lives of himself, his wife Agnes, the widow of Robert Wethurley and his son, John [S3]. In 1522 a Richard Hoddys had been assessed at £4 for the military survey and at £4 again for the lay subsidy of 1524. It is possible that the Richard Hoddys of the 1520s was the father of the Hoddes who took out the tenancy in 1534, but the assessment demonstrates that the family was well-established.91 Hoddes himself had held his wife’s tenancy of a property that included a water mill in Stapleton from the point of their marriage and in 1540 Hoddes extended his interests still further by taking another messuage [S11, S2]. By this point however he may have been in a business partnership for the tenancy was taken in the names of Hoddes, his son John and another man named Matthew Underhill, who was probably the active tenant. Finally in 1552 another tenancy was taken in the names of Hoddes, his son John and John’s wife Elizabeth [S1]. By 1563 Richard was dead, but his son John continued to pay the rent on three of the messuages his father had held and his half brother, Thomas Wethurley, now held the water mill [R109-111], [R118]. Hoddes was an important landholder in sixteenth century Stapleton, and it is perhaps an indication of the growing self-awareness of a man like Hoddes that he led a group of husbandmen to petition the Lord Chancellor at the turn of the 1540s about a manorial dispute, an early example of taking local disputes out of the manorial court and into the common law.92

The shared characteristic of these men is that, despite legal technicalities, they were all landholders. The Barton Regis and Ridgeway surveys and the rental roll are descriptions of landholding patterns and so ignore a good proportion of society, including those who were landless and the subject of increasing concern as the sixteenth century progressed.93 In the words of a modern commentator, “The officials of landed estates compiled rentals and surveys that recorded the names and holdings of tenants, but did not notice the subtenants”.94 The Ridgeway survey of 1569 sheds a little light on some of these subtenants because it locates landholdings in relation to the holdings of others. Thus William Clement held land near to that of James Corye, who is not known as a copyholder in either Barton Regis or Ridgeway, so we must conclude he was a husbandman who leased land from someone else [RGS4].
Gregory Drewe is another otherwise unknown neighbour of William Clement, while William Eroth, a Stapleton farmer is known to us because he apprenticed his son to a sadler in 1541. Eroth also joined the party of husbandmen, led by Richard Hoddes, who petitioned the Lord Chancellor about a dispute concerning access to common fields in Stapleton and of the sixteen named petitioners, five were not copyholders of Barton Regis or Ridgeway, yet they must have been sufficiently prosperous to undertake the expense of a lawsuit. We can therefore conclude that there was a group of relatively prosperous agricultural proprietors renting the land that they worked and the terms of such renting are regulated in the customs of the manor [C7].

Women appear frequently in sixteenth century documents about property – of the 124 leases and copyholdings described in the Sackville survey, women feature in more than 90. They were able to hold property, but that property was often vested in their husband, because legally a married couple was one person. Isabel, daughter of William Thomas married Thomas Waren and took to him the right to a cottage and bakehouse in West Street [E28] and Alice Warne may well have brought her holding to her husband, John [S29]. Many women therefore passed from the legal control of their father to that of their husband and only became independent in their widowhood. It was however possible for single women to hold land as was demonstrated by the Mangotsfield landholder, Alice, the daughter of the late Hugh and Petronell Rodley [M6] and women were often active in defence of their rights. Joanna Kemys or Kamys for example took exception to the reeve’s attempt to make her pay her rent ahead of time and with two supporters took action to recover the property that had been seized from her [C12 marginal addition 10].

Copyholds were often granted for the life of a man, his wife and their eldest child, whether male or female, and this reflects their origin as the holdings of the medieval peasant family. Isabel Waren and Alice Warne had been the third names on the copy, but the survey also tells us about women who were the second name and how they might bring the property to their second husbands. Agnes, the widow of Robert Wethurley, for example, took Richard Hoddes as her second husband and he held her water mill and messuage at Stapleton [S11]. It was a valuable holding with annual proceeds of £6 6s 4d and would remain with Richard for as long as he lived, but Agnes’ son Thomas Wethurley was the heir, rather than her other son, John Hoddes. Similarly Edyth, the wife of John Noble, had been the second name on a copy holding granted to her first husband, while her son Thomas Clement was the third [E40]. John Noble would be entitled to hold it for the rest of his life, but the heir was Thomas Clement. This widow’s right was explicitly acknowledged in customs of the manor as described on folio 23 of the Sackville survey and may perhaps have been the subject of considerable discussion in the court baron.

In the sixteenth century however grants were being made to women as the first life on the lease. Joanna Hawkyns, for example, held a messuage in Blacksworth associating her son and daughter with her [E42]. Alice Dymoke took out her holding in association with her daughters, Agnes and Alice [S27]. While we do not know whether the women undertook the agricultural management of these holdings, it is clear that there were no social or cultural conventions to prevent the grants and there is a column of 26 women jurors, not all of them widows, in the court of survey record. The fines paid by Joanna and Agnes for entry to these holdings (£2 and £2 6s 8d respectively) suggest that the women resources at their disposal. It is possible therefore that this property should be seen as part of an investment portfolio. A final example is the career of Joan or Joanna Pacy, who was granted two tenements in Stapleton in February 1544 [S13]. She had been married to the mercer, Thomas Badram, and two of her sons, John and Thomas Badram, were mentioned on the copy. By 1544 she had been widowed and had taken as her second husband, Thomas Pacy, another mercer, to whom another son, George Badram, was apprenticed in 1546. 98 So, although Joan had a living husband it was acceptable for the grant to be made in her name and it was Joan who rendered the rent for the holdings in 1563. [R120-122]

East of Bristol in the sixteenth century

The picture of the area to the east of Bristol that emerges from these documents is rural. It is a landscape of open fields, rough pasture and heathland interspersed with woodland. Although east Bristol would later be characterised by widespread industrial activity, there is little evidence for it in these Barton Regis documents. Such activity was well-established, however; the names of some thirteenth-century miners are known to us and there are references to revenues from sea coal, stone and earth for pottery in the accounts of the constable of Bristol castle from a similar period. 99 So well-established was the practice of mining that some pits were worked out and John Smith of Nibley narrates how Henry, Lord Berkeley scarcely escaped with his life during a hunt in Kingswood Chase when his horse drew up short because he happened on an old, unfilled coal pit. 100 Although the Sackville survey of Barton Regis makes only one reference to coal pits in Kingswood and a quarry pit of slate, the 1563 rental roll hints at developments by recording payments from tile pits, “coling”, clay pits, “colle pytts” and a “cole plase”. By 1569 it is clear that the industrial undertakings were profitable, for it was felt worthwhile within the royal administration for the crown to bring a case concerning Kingswood against Thomas Chester.

Unlike the nearly contemporary survey of the manor of Wookey, outside Wells, where there are descriptions of the dwellings, we know little about the buildings of East Bristol in the sixteenth century. The reference to a cottage called Stonehouse implies that it was unusual to build in stone, although it was a building material that was readily available from the local quarries. 101 The customs of the manor, however, make it clear that the tenants expected to fell timber for the maintenance of their properties. 102 Richard Wood, in his deposition to the 1569 case, testified that, when Sir Nicholas Poyntz controlled the manor, he had given licence to Henry Curtys to fell a tree to repair a house standing within the manor. 103 Robert Edwards, a husbandman and witness in the same case, declared that Henry Brayne, as farmer

The author identifies three properties in Mangotsfield as potential “longhouses”, an early building form that included accommodation for people and livestock under the same roof (p. 13 Clevehill Farm, Dibden Farm and Downend Farm).
102 A twelfth to fifteenth-century dwelling was excavated at Mangotsfield, Donna Young, “Archaeological review 2009: Rodway Hill sports ground, Pomphey Hill Road, Mangotsfield ST 67007591” TBGAS, 128 (2010), 241–2.

of the manor, had given similar licence to William Clement to cut down two or three trees to repair his tenement. The norm therefore may have been the timber-framed buildings of cruck construction that have been inferred from archaeological and historical evidence elsewhere in Gloucestershire, though these were probably substantial dwellings possibly with chambers inserted above some of the rooms as are described in the Wookey survey. \(^{104}\) Nikolaus Pevsner comments in his volume covering Bristol on the timber-framed house with oriel, overhang and gable, which survived as late as the mid 1950s at 8 Clarence Road. \(^{105}\) The Barton Regis survey does record whether buildings were tiled or thatched, and this may reflect the thriving tile-making industry. Such timber framed constructions, each within its own curtilage, would have been replaced by stone farmhouses, like Bridge Farm on Bell Hill in Stapleton, after the great enclosures of the eighteenth century.

Within the Barton Regis survey there is evidence of contemporary agrarian change as the open fields began to be enclosed. Six of Robert Corye’s seven and a half acres in the west field were “tyned in or enclosed” as were the three and a half acres he held at the entry to the Easton field [E36]. It is likely too that the closes that appear throughout the text represent earlier enclosures of common or vacant land. Such enclosures have been taken as evidence of profound change in English agriculture that would lead ultimately to the replacement of the peasant proprietor with a new kind of agricultural capitalist whose appearance would lead to higher yields in a period of increasing population and enable the emergence of a different society. There was much protest against enclosures, which reached its culmination in the years before the Barton Regis surveys were taken. \(^{106}\) Another facet of contemporary agrarian change, which can be found in the surveys, is engrossment, which involved the absorption of peasant land holdings by wealthier landed proprietors. The activities of William Blunte in Mangotsfield and James Fawcett in Easton seem to fall into this category, where both proprietors paid significant fines to have access to larger than average holdings.

Easton tithing lay nearest to Bristol castle and Walter Young’s property, which he had held since 1515, is described as the “site” of the manor. The demesne lands, that is the lands that had been directly farmed on behalf of the lord, mostly lay in this area. In total demesne lands consisting of 35 acres of arable, more than 25 acres of meadow and at least 17 of pasture are mentioned in the Barton Regis survey, all of which were by the 1550s in the hands of tenants. This is significantly lower than the medieval demesne that can be reconstructed from the constable’s accounts and suggests that direct exploitation of the demesne had been in decline for some time. \(^{107}\) Walter Young’s copyhold is among the earliest grant that can be traced in the surveys, but other grants enrolled in the 1520s and 1530s were often supplemented by some demesne land, and the 1563 rental roll indicates that John Warren held two acres that were formerly the steward’s. These then are signs that the apparatus of medieval lordship was all but dismantled by the mid sixteenth century, but the parish of St Philip’s within Lawford’s gate was still semi-rural in character as the Smith map of 1568 shows. The gardens and closes between the buildings were not yet infilled and several residents of the parish described themselves as husbandmen in their wills, leaving livestock as their legacies.\footnote{Tudor Wills, nos. 112, 131, 143.} In contrast there is evidence in the two Ridgeway surveys of urban development at and beyond the gate [RGL4, RGS2]. Two settlements are named in the survey at Easton and Southwick and a street, called West Street, linked Easton to the eastern boundary of the city at Lawford’s gate.\footnote{Archaeological work has detected occupation from at least the thirteenth century, Andy King, “Nos. 22–30 West Street, Old Market, ST 59907319 (Archaeological review 2005)”, TBGAS, 124 (2006), 216.} Some of the Easton holdings included arable lands in Stapleton tithing, while the Stapleton copyholders had interests in the King’s marsh, so there must have been constant movement of people and livestock between the two tithings.

The King’s wood: an unresolved issue

By 1565 the former royal manor of Barton Regis had effectively been dismembered. Stapleton was in the hands of Richard Berkeley, Thomas Chester held the lands of the Barton that lay in St Philip’s parish and Richard Dennys was disposing of his uncle’s interests in Mangotsfield.\footnote{CPR, Elizabeth I, vol. III, 1563–6 (London: HMSO, 1961), no. 591 (p. 136) 1564 alienation to Edward Sheratt; no. 3007 to William Sheringe, no. 3008 to Thomas Bampton; CPR, Elizabeth I, vol. IV, 1566–9 (London: HMSO, 1969), no. 849 (1567) to Fulk Marley and Peter Chapman, no. 7088 (1567) to Thomas Bayle and Thomas Luton.} The position of the King’s wood was, however, unclear. During the middle ages it had been an integral part of the resources that had supported the garrison of Bristol castle and may have included woods on both sides of the River Avon; the inclusion of the north Somerset tithings of Bedminster, Knowle, Bishport (Bishopsworth), Whitchurch and Norton [Malreward] in the 1563 rent roll gives some support to this idea, but the area had only began to acquire the name Kingswood in the thirteenth century.\footnote{Sharp, lix. For the most recent study of the forest of Kingswood, J. S. Moore, “The medieval forest of Kingswood”, Avon Past, 7 (1982), 6–16.} The Barton and the woodland were the responsibility of the castle constable, and from at least the end of the thirteenth century he was assisted by a keeper or forester.\footnote{The Book of Fees, 3 vols (London: HMSO, 1921–31), 2, 1408.} The residents of Barton Regis had access to the resources of the King’s wood, and the constables’ accounts record their pannage payments for the pasture of pigs. The customs of the manor give details of their rights to fuel, while the Barton Regis surveys make reference to common of pasture in Kingswoodeheath.\footnote{Sharp, li-lii; [S1, S6-S9] and [C]15.} John Leland, who visited the area in the 1530s and 1540s, describes the landscape as “hilly and stony ground with the feren ovar growne in dyvers places”.\footnote{Itinerary of John Leland, ed. Toulmin Smith, v, 86.}

From the middle ages, however, the precise status of the King’s wood had been uncertain and there had been formal enquiries.\footnote{Sharp, l.} As Queen Elizabeth’s administrators sought in the early years of her reign to reinvigorate the management of crown lands, the potential of Barton Regis did not elude them and in 1569 the attorney general, Gilbert Gerard brought a case against Thomas Chester, which makes it clear that the woods were of value not simply for timber and fuel, but for a range of other activities carried on there, including the extraction of coal and clay.\footnote{David Thomas, “The Elizabethan Crown Lands: Their Purposes and Problems”, Estates of the English Crown, 1558–1640, ed. R. W. Hoyle (Cambridge UP., 1992), 58–87; TNA E 133/1/87.} John Birch, a Baron... of the Exchequer, took depositions or witness statements which were intended to determine whether the woods were part of the manor of Barton Regis. If that were the case they would have passed to Thomas Chester with the rest of the lands he had bought. Witnesses were asked about the extent of the manor – whether woods and lands were part of the manor; whether there were coal pits, tile pits or clay pits; who held the “commodity” of the pits. They were also asked whether the owners of the manor of Barton Regis had cut down trees in the wood, and whether tenants had rights of fuel, since that would indicate that the woods were part of the common resources of the manor, made available by the lord to his tenants.

The crown was anxious to prove that the King’s wood was a forest, one of the areas of land which had been set aside as a hunting preserve when William I had introduced forest law after the Norman Conquest; as such it could not form part of the sale to Chester. The tenants, whose depositions survive, were keen to deny it and stoutly maintained that the woods were part of the manor. Robert Edwards, a husbandman of 60 years of age, testified that timber had been felled to repair the properties on the manor, and that he had never known the area as a forest. Richard Wood, a husbandman of 40 years of age, said that he had never heard it called a forest until recently but he had heard it called the Kingswood chase. He was aware, however, of a ranger and four keepers, the successors to the forester first mentioned in the thirteenth century and the crown continued to make these appointments until the seventeenth century.

Each deponent gave slightly different information about the coal and clay pits, but their evidence on, for example, the tenants’ rights to fuel and the drive over the manor to recover straying livestock, concurs with the information given in the customs of the manor, implying that the woods had always been part of the manor’s resources. Indeed John Warren, who had held the office of woodward for Sir Maurice Dennys, made the point that the King’s wood was as much part and parcel of the manor of Barton as the marsh or meadow called the kings marsh. [D5.7]

The inquisition post mortem taken after the death of Thomas Chester in 1583 indicates that he still continued to hold the woods, but the Chester family archive, now in GRO, shows that litigation about Barton Regis continued. In the early years of the seventeenth century new approaches to increasing crown revenue for King James I were tried by his chief minister, Robert Cecil, earl of Salisbury, and Lord Buckhurst, the Lord Treasurer. Insisting on the fact that Kingswood was a royal forest, rights over the coal, stone and slate were leased to Edward Fitzgerald and in 1609/10 Fitzgerald brought an action against various landed proprietors with interests

Walter Browne, a husbandman of Stapleton, aged 74 in 1609, described how the woods of Stapleton and Mangotsfield were “severed and graunted away” from the manor of Barton Regis by Sir Maurice Dennys and his successors, Sir Walter and Richard Dennys. This picture of the Dennys family dividing the manor and selling off property piecemeal can be inferred from other sources, as we have seen, and it is confirmed by the testimony of Robert Lathbury of Stapleton, who said he had lived in the area for fifty years and had known lands of Billingsley and Berkeley, two of the defendants, as part of the manor of Barton Regis. Thomas Chester, who had purchased the lands in St Philip’s parish and the rights of the hundred court, was the grandfather of one of the defendants in 1609. He had been a merchant and an astute business man, for he had gained not only the land and jurisdictional rights, but also the rights to the coal works and quarries that lay in his lands. According to William Whatlie, aged 70, of Barton Regis, it was Chester’s son William, who had leased those coal pits, pennant and paving stone quarries to William Curtis, while Thomas Corye, a tanner, asserted that he had been present when the lease was assigned and Walter Browne provided the information that Curtis’s son had sold these interests on to Arthur Player and Nicholas Dimerie.\textsuperscript{125} Player and Dimerie are also known to have been involved in the exploitation of the coal mines that lay in Lord Berkeley’s area of Kingswood, though the precise details of their activities have yet to be fully researched.\textsuperscript{126}

The history of Barton Regis

Little scholarly work has been undertaken on the history of east Bristol. The rich resources covering households and communicants which have survived for the neighbouring parishes that lie in the Hawkesbury deanery of Gloucester diocese, do not survive for the Bristol diocese, so the parishes of Stapleton and Mangotsfield are not covered in modern work of the demography of Gloucestershire in the sixteenth and seventeenth century.\textsuperscript{127} An important study of the relationship between town and country in the seventeenth century took Bristol and its hinterland as its focus, but had little to say on the surrounding locality.\textsuperscript{128} The individual parishes were treated in the great county compilations such as Atkyns, Rudder and Bigland, but the Victoria

County History has yet to reach the area and nothing has been written directly on the area apart from brief historical appraisals written in connection with strategic planning for organisations such as English Heritage. Attention has mostly centred on industrial and in particular coal-mining history, and the reputation of the miners has proved fertile ground for historians of radicalism. The area has also attracted attention because of its associations with religious figures of the eighteenth-century and there has been some important work on garden history. Architectural historians have little to say about the area where building was dispersed and eastward urban development was slow to start.

At the end of the nineteenth century three clergymen contributed studies that had a bearing on part of the locality: Henry Thomas Ellacombe (1790–1885), vicar of Bitton from 1835 to 1850, Abraham Braine, congregational minister at Somerton in Somerset and a native of Bitton, and Arthur Emlyn Jones (1854–1906), curate of Downend from 1896 to 1906. Ellacombe’s History and Antiquities of the Parish of Bitton (1881–3) concentrates on the descent of manors through local families and the history of the church at Bitton, but Ellacombe was remarkable for the diligence with which he collected documents and his work still has value as a readily accessible source for documents relevant to the history of Bitton and Kingswood. Braine’s History of Kingswood probably owes a great deal to Ellacombe, though it is not acknowledged. Braine’s book has been profoundly influential on all those who have worked on the history of the area, even to the point of his words being used without appropriate credit. The work is however patchy, often anecdotal, and it is clear that Braine was out of his depth in dealing with the materials that he had found. His interpretations are fanciful, but have been perpetuated in local works of popular history. Jones' Our Parish: Mangotsfield including Downend (1899) is more limited in its geographical coverage, but is thorough in its approach, assembling a variety of sources and dealing with them in thematic chapters. He has a chapter outlining the history of various properties in the parish which has been compiled from local deeds, for example, and he attempts to describe the division and descent of the medieval manor of Mangotsfield. He also provides descriptions of the effigies to be found in Mangotsfield church in the nineteenth century, but his failure to reference properly the sources that he so diligently sought out is frustrating and undermines the value of the work.136

The twentieth century has mostly seen works by locally based writers, such as those of William Thomas Sanigar (1882–1959), Saint George’s in the East: Records of a Bristol District (1931); Houses and People of Old St. George: Further Records of a Bristol Parish (1936), Leaves from a Barton Hill Notebook (1954), Descent of Walter Harry Edwards of Barton Hill, Bristol (1949) and Lionel Ellery, The St Mark (Lower Easton) Story (1984), Easton the Forgotten Hamlet (1986), Our Yesterdays in Easton (1987), Easton Promise: the Continuing Story of a Bristol Community (with Veronica Smith) (1989) and Easton Cameos (with Veronica Smith) (1992). Both writers responded to an intense interest in the locality, writing knowledgeably about the topography of the area, and their legacy has been a number of active local history groups that continue to research the history of East Bristol. Downend Local History Society, for example, has produced a number of pamphlets on various aspects of local history and Barton Hill History Group maintains an informative website.137 Most significant however is the Kingswood History Society publication Sixteenth Century Court Book of Siston, which discusses the manuscript in which the Sackville survey of Barton Regis appears.138 The volume, which presents a contextual introduction followed by sections on the survey and other material that is preserved in the manuscript, is a tribute to the energy and enthusiasm of this local history group.

Customs of the manor of Barton Regis 1553

Description of the manuscript
The customs of the manor of Barton Regis are to be found in the record of a court of survey held in Barton Regis in 1553 (MS GRO D674a/M24). In common with most manorial documents of the period the record takes the form of a roll and consists of 14 membranes each measuring just over 12 inches in width and 27 inches in length. The roll is generally well preserved, but has sustained some wear at

- membrane 7, the bottom of which shows signs of water damage;
- membrane 8, where a section has been lost;
- membranes 12 and 13, where there are tears but no loss of text;
- membrane 14, where there is serious wear and text has been lost.

The membranes are secured at the top by six large stitches, made through a strip of parchment, which protects the top of the roll. The strip measures approximately 12” by 1”. The first membrane is endorsed Barton Regs [sic] iuxt: Brystoll / Rot’ Cur’ ac Territor’ Henrici Brayne / ar’ Capital Scel ac Firmar’; / De omnibus terr’ prat’ et pastur’ ibm’ / fact’ die et a' / infrascrpt’. When the roll is opened the first membrane contains the names of the jurors and the free tenants. The customs begin on membrane 2 and continue to membrane 3. Three strips of parchment measuring approximately three and a half inches by half an inch are pinned to membrane 3, at the points where customs [C] 14, 15 and 16 are written. From membrane 4 the details of the customary holdings begin. The tithing of Easton appears on membranes 4 to 8, with the final two entries on membrane 8 being for the tithing of Mangotsfield. Membranes 9 to 11 cover Mangotsfield and membranes 12 to 14 list the holdings in the tithing of Stapleton. This is the reverse of the order in the Sackville survey (MS Kent U269/M84), which lists holdings in Stapleton, Mangotsfield and Easton. In total 83 holdings are described, 17 free tenants1 are named along with the 115 jurors present. The Sackville survey, in contrast, lists 128 holdings and 14 free tenants, and it is tempting therefore to speculate that one or two membranes have been lost from the court roll.

The text is written in brown ink with much embellishment of initial letters. Initial words are emboldened and written in larger letters. Copyholders’ names are also in bold. The customs were numbered by the scribe and there are marginal additions appearing to the left of several customs. These additions provide further information, usually case law about the application of the custom. The additions appear after the individual custom in the transcription.

1 The name John White appears twice in this list, but there are known to have been two John Whites in Bristol in the 1550s: John White, also frequently Whyte, (died 1558) (TNA PROB 11/42a/82) and John White (merchant died 1570) (TNA PROB 11/52/179).
History of the manuscript
The manuscript forms part of the Chester Master collection at GRO and the customs are published with the kind permission of the owner, Mr W. Chester Master. The roll records a survey of Barton Regis taken on 26–27 May 1553, during the stewardship of Henry Brayne, who is described as the capital seneschal and fermor of the manor. The survey was taken by Geoffrey Danyell at the expense of William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, who had been granted the manor by the king. Most of Pembroke’s landed interests lay in Wiltshire, where he had obtained Wilton Abbey after the Dissolution of the Monasteries, and so he sold Barton Regis to Sir Maurice Dennys. After Sir Maurice’s death in 1563 a series of sales took place, and Thomas Chester, a member of a thriving Bristol mercantile dynasty, bought control of the hundredal court of Barton Regis and what might be described as the rump of the old royal manor, consisting mainly of the interests in the tithing of Easton. The court of survey roll passed to Chester as a result of this purchase. Chester also purchased Knole Park near Almondsbury, Gloucestershire and the Chester family continued to live there until the eighteenth century, when the marriage of the Chester heiress, Elizabeth Chester Cann, brought their property and their records to the Master family of Cirencester. The records were deposited in the GRO in 1951, but remain the property of the Chester Master family.

Editorial method
The customs have been transcribed with contractions and abbreviations expanded where this could be done safely. Punctuation has not been modernised, except where confusion would follow without it. Capitalisation follows modern conventions. The customs were numbered by the scribe and the letter [C] has been added. Other editorial interventions have been kept to the minimum and additions are indicated thus [ ]. Each marginal addition is reproduced after the custom with which it is associated.

II  SURVEY OF THE MANOR OF BARTON REGIS 1553–63

DESCRIPTION AND HISTORY OF THE SURVEY OF THE MANOR OF BARTON WITHE THE HUNDRED NIGHE BRISTOWELL IN THE COUNTYE OF GLOUC’
Description and history of the survey of the manor of Barton with the hundred of Bristowell in the County of Glouc’

Description of the manuscript
The survey can be found in Kent History and Library Centre at Maidstone and is part of a loose leaf portfolio of documents measuring 32 mm by 24 mm, which has the finding number U269/M84.

The portfolio is not sewn, though the paper has been pierced and it, or parts of it, may have been sewn together in the past. It has a parchment cover, made up of two re-used documents sewn together; the text of one document survives on the inside of the lower cover as do the slits that were cut for sealing of the document. The title on lower front cover of the portfolio reads “26 May 7 Edwardi 6th/ Extract of view of frankpledge of the manor of Barton and several other manors in the county of Gloucester /fol. 87 / A: 7: 2.”

The contents of the portfolio are 59 leaves on paper; some are single sheet documents. The earliest leaves are expenditure records for a religious house dating from the 1520s and there are 25 leaves at the end of the portfolio, which relate to the manor of Siston, near Bristol. The survey of the manor of Barton Regis, which is unfoliated, begins at the second gathering of the portfolio.

There are sixteen bifolia into which a single bifolium has been inserted between leaves [9] and [12] and another between [27] and [30]. At the end of the survey there are two separate bifolia, leaves [37–40].

The survey covers first the tithing of Stapleton to folio 9 verso, then the tithing of Mangotsfield folios 11–22 and then the tithing of Easton folios 23–40. There are four clear discrepancies in the text:

- The text on folio [5] verso does not flow into the text on folio [6] In the Worthie ij acres (ijs) pasture severall / the Sladd cont j acre of pasture (xijd).
- The text on folio [8] verso does not flow into the text on folio [9] one other close called / In Polegaston.
- The text on folio [26] verso does not flow into the text on folio [27] ij acres of pasture / Item one cotage (v') called paccoks
- The text on folios [28] and [29] is anomalous in that the first leaf [28] contains material relating to Stapleton tithing, while the second leaf [29] relates to the tithing of Easton.

The first discrepancy can be rectified, if the manuscript is disassembled and rearranged so that folio [5] is followed by folio [9]. The text then flows as follows: in the Worthie ij acres (ijs) pasture severall / In Polegaston vij acres (vijs) several round arr’. The second discrepancy can be addressed if folio [9] in its new position is followed by folio [8]. Agnes Attwood’s holding which appears on folio [9] verso then immediately precedes the reversion of her property which is described on folio [8]. Folio [6] can then follow folio [8] verso with the text flowing as follows: one other close called / the Sladd cont j acre of pasture…Folio [7] follows folio [6]. The folio sequence is now [1–5] [9] [8] [6] [7].

Of course, these adjustments change the order of the corresponding folios in the second part of the portfolio and so produce a new folio sequence.

folio [9]’s correspond is folio [26];
folio [8]’s correspond is folio [27];
folio [6]’s is folio [31] and folio [7]’s is folio [30].

There is therefore a new folio sequence of [25], [30], [31], [27], [26], [32] and this has the effect of rectifying the third discrepancy because folio 26 verso is no longer followed by folio 27. It is now followed by folio 32, enabling text to flow as ij acres of pasture / in the common.

The fourth discrepancy can be rectified if the bifolium containing folio [28] and folio [29], which is currently slipped in between [27] and [30], is restored to its proper place in the sequence of bifolia.

If folio [28] is placed after folio [5], its correspond, folio [29], will appear between folio [25] and folio [30]. The material on Stapleton on folio 28 will now appear at the end of the description of Stapleton and the material on Easton on folio 29 appears with the description of Easton. The overall foliation sequence will be of [25], [29], [30], [31], [27], [26], [32].

The single loose bifolium, which is inserted between leaves [9] and [12] [folios 10 and 11] is written by a different hand. Half of folio 11 has been cut away. The first entry on [10] relates to a holding in the king’s marsh and should therefore appear with the holdings in the Easton tithing. In this edition the text of this entry has been numbered [E62] and inserted at the end of the Easton holdings, immediately before the list of free tenants. The entry on [11] relates to Mangotsfield; it has been numbered [M34] and inserted at the end of the Mangotsfield holdings, directly before the customs. All the other adjustments have been made in the edition of the text.

The survey is the product of a single hand, except for that on folios [10] and [11]. This interpolating script seems to recur in the Siston material, though it is hard to tell since it is an undisciplined and difficult hand. The main hand does not appear elsewhere in the portfolio.

The text of the survey is arranged in three columns with the middle column containing information about 142 properties, mostly copyhold tenures, within the manor of Barton Regis. The left hand column provides details of the fine, the grantor of the tenancy and/or the rent and the number of lives remaining on the tenancy. The right hand column provides details of the proceeds from the property and the totals of arable, pasture and meadow, although the latter information is very inconsistently given. For the purposes of publication the information in the left hand column appears at the beginning of the entry and the information in the right hand column at the end.

It is known that a survey of Barton Regis was taken at the expense of William Herbert, earl of Pembroke at the point when he purchased the manor in 1553. That survey was recorded in the roll now held by GRO.¹ The Sackville survey in Kent Record Office asserts in the manuscript’s heading that it is that survey, taken in 1553 by Geoffrey Danyell, but comparison between the two texts shows that they are not identical. The Sackville manuscript presents the entries in a different order, contains additional material (indicated in the edition presented here), and it summarises the customs of the manor. It therefore appears to be an updated version of Danyell’s survey and, since it is to be found with a portfolio of papers that also contains material on Siston, the Dennys family property, it seems reasonable to associate it with Sir Maurice Dennys, who bought Barton Regis from the earl of Pembroke shortly after 1553. It is known that Dennys had his own survey undertaken by one Peter Morgan, assisted by William Popley.² Although we cannot be absolutely certain the Sackville survey is Morgan’s work, the updated material and the codex format suggests a tool for estate management.

Sir Maurice Dennys was a man with a growing property portfolio. He was the second son of Sir William Dennys, whose family had held land at Dyrham for several generations, and of Anne, daughter of Sir Maurice Berkeley, after whom Maurice Dennys may have been named. As a second son, Maurice Dennys needed to make his own way in the world, and he embarked on a career as a lawyer, being appointed successively marshal, steward and bencher of the Inner Temple in the 1540s. He married the widow of a wealthy mercer and by the early 1550s was in a position to relieve Pembroke of various manors in Gloucestershire, including Barton Regis, having already acquired the family manor of Siston from his older brother.

When Dennys died in 1563 the survey would have passed with the rest of his property to his nephew and heir, Richard Dennys, who disposed of his inheritance in a series of sales. In 1568 Robert Weeks or Wykes, a member of a family that originated from Dodington and heir of his grandfather, Nicholas Wykes, sometime sheriff of Gloucestershire,³ purchased Siston from Richard Dennys for £3200.⁴ Although Weeks did not purchase Barton Regis, the Barton Regis survey must have remained at Siston until at least 1581, for the portfolio of documents contains the Siston court roll up to that year.

The history of the manuscript then becomes a matter of speculation, but is likely to have followed the descent of the manor of Siston, which Weeks continued to hold until 1607, when he offered to sell it to Robert Cecil, earl of Salisbury. It was eventually bought by Henry Billingsley, son of Sir Henry Billingsley (d. 1606), Lord Mayor of London 1596/7, haberdasher, merchant and farmer of customs at the Port of London, who had made the first English translation of Euclid.⁵ The manor remained with the Billingsley family until the 1630s when the Billingsleys fell on hard times and it found its way into the hands of Lionel Cranfield, first earl of Middlesex in 1637.

The transaction is hard to pin down, but Cranfield’s biographer infers that Billingsley had made a political miscalculation and needed a quick sale. Despite his own financial embarrassments Cranfield was able to oblige. Cranfield was in Menna Prestwich’s words “an accumulator of papers” and it is likely that, before the Siston property was let, the survey was sent to become part of the Cranfield archives at Copt Hall in Essex. It would then have been inherited by James and Lionel Cranfield, respectively the second and third earls of Middlesex and after Lionel’s death in 1674 by his nephew, Charles Sackville, the son of his sister, Frances. Charles Sackville, earl of Dorset, sold Copt Hall in 1701 and in her memoir Knole and the Sackvilles Vita Sackville-West describes the arrival at Knole of cartloads of Copt Hall’s contents, among which, it must be assumed, was the survey of Barton Regis.

Editorial conventions

The survey has been transcribed with contractions and abbreviations expanded where this could be done safely. There is a symbol before most valuations and rents in the survey, which has not been transcribed. Some rents have been written above the text and these are reproduced in brackets. Punctuation has not been modernised, except where confusion would follow without it. Capitalisation follows modern conventions. Editorial interventions have been kept to the minimum and additions are indicated thus [ ]. Footnotes are confined to details about the manuscript, and people and places are identified in the relevant indexes, where possible. Variations between MS GRO D674a/M24 are recorded except where they are minor spelling variants “y” for “i” for example.

Each holding in the Barton Regis survey has been assigned a running number, starting S for Stapleton, M for Mangotsfield and E for Easton. The date of the issue of copyhold has been added after this running number, together with an indication if the entry is not to be found in the Gloucester roll that records the court of survey in 1553.

6 The survey uses “di” for dimidium (half) an acre.
7 Seven acres worth 2s 4d will yield 16s 4d. The notation used is best represented by o. This symbol is used throughout the survey, though not uniformly, before values. It has not been transcribed after these initial usages.
8 MS GRO D674a/M24 omits “and common of pasture in Kyngeswode worthe iijs iiijd”.
9 MS GRO D674a/M24 does not give a figure for the rent, but leaves a space.
10 MS GRO D674a/M24 reads “xxvij”.
11 The MS is worn at this point which is the extreme right hand of the page. Positioning of the letters, as well as the content of the text, suggests the contraction for dimidium has been used.
12 Classical Latin grammar would use the ablative form “milite”. Subsequent usages of the accusative are marked [sic].

III  RENT ROLL OF THE MANOR OF BARTON REGIS 1563
Rent Roll of the manor of Barton Regis 1563

Description of the manuscript
The 1563 rent roll for the manor of Barton Regis (MS BRO 99/1) is made up of four membranes, joined to form a continuous roll. Each membrane measures approximately 230 mm in width, but varies in length. Membrane 1 is approximately 350 mm in length; membrane 2 approximately 610 mm, membrane 3 approximately 640 mm and membrane 4 approximately 650 mm in length. Membrane 4 has sustained considerable damage to its right side and there are holes in the paper at the bottom of the roll. The roll is endorsed on the rear of membrane 1 “Sr Moris Denys [perhaps hys] rent /role of Barton Regis” and “Tile pitts rent / cole pitts rent”.

The roll is substantially the work of one hand, which drafted in two columns. Tenants’ names and property form the left column with the amount paid in the right column. The two columns are linked with lines. A second hand, writing in black ink, has corrected some entries and inserted the symbol “P” in the left margin against nine entries and “B” against one entry. The “P” entries are all related to coal working. The main hand is erratic in spelling and in practice. Some entries are bracketted and sub totals are given. Methods of recording the payments for hen and eggs are also inconsistent.

History of the manuscript
In 1563 the manor of Barton Regis was in the possession of Sir Maurice Dennys. The rent roll is likely therefore to have been made by his steward. At this date Sir Maurice was rebuilding his fortunes after a period of financial and personal difficulties in the 1550s.

In December 1548 he had been appointed Treasurer of Calais, only to come under suspicion for malpractice and be committed to the Fleet in 1553. Under Queen Mary he remained out of favour and made extensive payments to the crown. He took up residence in Kent and mortgaged the manor of Siston before beginning to recover his position in the early years of Queen Elizabeth. He seems to have been involved in the preparations for the expedition to Normandy, perhaps because of his expertise gained in Calais, but he died of the plague in Portsmouth in August 1563. As the 1563 rents were probably collected at Michaelmas, Sir Maurice is likely to have done little more than order the compilation of the roll. The additions in black ink are therefore, if they were made by the lord rather than the steward, the work of Sir Maurice’s brother Sir Walter or his nephew Richard Dennys.

The history of the manuscript thereafter is a matter of speculation. The manor and hundred of Barton Regis was purchased in 1564 by Thomas Chester and the rental roll, as the most recent estate management tool, is likely to have passed to him. It did not apparently join the rest of the Chester family archives at Knole.
Park, Almondsbury, however, since those records were entrusted to the GRO by the Chester-Master family in a series of deposits made from the 1950s onwards. The rent roll in contrast is to be found at the BRO, where it was deposited in 1933 through the agency of J. E. Pritchard, President of the Bristol and Gloucestershire Archaeological Society (1918–20).\footnote{Thomas, “J. E. Pritchard and the archaeology of Bristol”.} Pritchard was a local auctioneer and estate agent with a keen interest in local history and standing archaeology, who contributed archaeological notes to the TBGAS over many years. Pritchard had found the roll among the effects of Charles Wells (1859–1932), a journalist on the Bristol Times and Mirror and author of Historic Bristol (1902) and A Short History of the Port of Bristol (1909). The BRO accession record for BRO 99, a deposit that includes draft leases, property deeds and records of the manor court of Barton Regis, indicates that the documents had been found in “Charles Wells’ desk by John E. Pritchard, who was unable to establish how they had got there.” Since the manorial rights had been sold to Handel Cossham and Joseph Wethered in 1875\footnote{BRO 42228/1/67/13.} it is possible that Wells secured these records after the death of Handel Cossham in 1890. Wells seems to have been a manuscript collector of some significance, for he had located the 1511–12 compotus roll of St Augustine’s abbey, which had apparently disappeared from the archives at an early date.\footnote{Two Compotus Rolls of Saint Augustine’s Abbey, Bristol for 1491–2 and 1511–12, ed. Gwen Beachcroft and Arthur Sabin (BRS IX, 1938), 88.}

The text has been transcribed without modernising the capitalisation. Editorial intervention, which has been kept to a minimum, is shown thus [ ], except for the bracketted entries where entries are indented after the initial one naming the individual who has paid. For ease of reference each line has been numbered and where the payment can be clearly linked back to an entry in the Sackville survey of Barton Regis the number assigned in the survey is given in a footnote, thus [E4]. The lines linking the individual and their payment have been retained for ease of use.

IV SURVEYS OF THE MANOR OF RIDGEWAY 1523–69
Surveys of the manor of Ridgeway 1523–69

Description of the manuscripts

The Seymour Survey (Longleat, Seymour papers vol. XII)
The Seymour survey occupies five pages over three leaves of a well-preserved account book of 354 paper leaves. These three leaves, measuring 310mm × 220 mm, have most recently been foliated 86–88, but also bear modern pagination 171–175 and the foliation lxxv – lxxvij at the inner margin of the verso of the folio. Folio 88 verso is blank. A survey of Corsley in Wiltshire begins on folio 89. There is a handsome contemporary binding, which is of roll-stamped leather.

The text is written in a single column with wide margins to left and right in which substantial additions have been made to update the information. A vertical line appears in the right margin of each entry which joins together text associated with a particular holding and links it to its valuation, which appears in the margin. Thus on folio 86 there is a marginal note that the holding of John Bate is valued at 7s 6d. Sub totals appear at the bottom of each page.

There is a large ornamented heading on the first page and the initial letter J has been embellished with elaborate scrolling and ornamentation characteristic of the sixteenth century. The hand, however, is not that of the surveyor, John Berwick or Barwyck, which is preserved in other documents in the Longleat collections. The excellent penmanship together with the quality of the binding suggest that the survey was produced as part of an overhaul of the Seymour estate records at a significant point in the family’s history.

History of the manuscript
The Seymour survey was made between May 1523 when Sir John Seymour’s agents leased a tenement to John Bate and 6 May 1540, when Edward Seymour, earl of Hertford, eldest son of Sir John (died 1536) and brother of Jane, the third queen of Henry VIII, sold the manor to Henry White or Whyte, a grocer of Bristol.1 Marginal additions to the manuscript update the survey with references to more recent grants, together with an indication when the entry fines are to be paid and one of these additions can be used provide greater precision about the date of the survey.

The third entry in the Longleat survey describes the land of James Fawcett [RGL3] which he held without copy when the survey was made and copied into the volume. It has been updated in the margin to indicate that a grant had subsequently been made for the lives of James, his wife Sibyl and Ellen, Sibyl’s daughter. The Smyth survey in describing the Fawcett holding provides a date of 17 August 1536 for that grant [RGS1]. The Longleat survey must therefore have been made and copied into the account book before that date, because the account book was revisited and updated with the detail of the grant for three lives. While we can thus deduce that the account book was compiled before or in the first half of 1536, we cannot determine the interval between the making of the survey and its entry into the account book. The date of the survey can thus be placed between May 1523 and early 1536. It is tempting to suggest that when Edward Seymour succeeded his father in 1536, he caused the account book to be created and the family’s receiver John Berwick entered details of all the Seymour holdings. Tenancies were then clarified by the new lord and formal grants were made to those who held without copy, which were then entered in the new account book as marginal additions.

The survey did not pass to the White family with the title to the manor when it was sold in 1540. It had been bound within the lavishly ornamented account book, which also contained the accounts of the Seymours’ major property of Wolf Hall in Wiltshire and surveys of other Seymour lands. It stayed among the Seymour papers, presumably arriving at Longleat with the rest of those papers after the death in 1674 of Frances Devereux, widow of William Seymour, second duke of Somerset, who had appointed a Thynne as her executor.2

The Longleat muniments were arranged in the nineteenth century by the antiquarian and honorary canon of Bristol cathedral, J. E. Jackson (1805–91), and a title page and index was added at that time to the account book, which subsequently became known as volume XII of the Seymour papers.3

The text has been transcribed with original punctuation but with modern capitalisation of personal and place names. Light oblique lines appear throughout the text which have been transcribed. Features of the text such as use of the margins have been preserved by the arrangement of the text and the acreage totals appear on separate lines as they do in the manuscripts.

Each entry has been numbered for ease of reference thus [RGL1] and marginal additions appear after the entry to which they refer.

The Smyth Survey (MS BRO AC/M/17/1–2)

There are two copies of the Smyth survey of the manor of Ridgeway, which are to be found among the Ashton Court papers, now held at the BRO. They are of similar size (310mm × 210mm) and appearance, and seem to date from the same period. MS BRO AC/M/17/1 is made up of five sheets of paper (310 mm × 420 mm) folded to make ten leaves. The leaves have been sewn and leaves 3, 4 and 6 have been numbered. There is no evidence of numbering on the other leaves. [1 matches 10, 2 matches 9, 3 matches 8, 4 matches 7, 5–6]. MS BRO AC/M/17/2 has nine leaves, sewn together leaves 1 and 2 are single sheets, while 3–4, 5–6, 7–8 are folded sheets, 9 is a single sheet and there is evidence of a tenth sheet. The first two sheets have sustained damage and are torn. The document has been folded in half and the tears have been caused by wear along the line of the fold. The manuscript has not been foliated. On the physical evidence of the two manuscripts, it could be concluded that MS BRO AC/M/17/1 is a fair copy, while MS BRO AC/M/17/2 is the working copy from which the other was compiled and this conclusion is reinforced by the annotations that have been made to MS BRO AC/M/17/2.

History of the manuscript
As a lawyer Matthew Smyth was more than capable of undertaking for himself a survey of the property he had bought at Ridgeway and on 10 August 1569, on the very day that he concluded the sale, he conducted a court of survey, which produced the second document published here.4 In 1580 Smyth’s elder brother, Hugh, died and Smyth inherited the family property, including the manor house of Ashton Court, purchased by their father in 1545. Smyth’s survey of the manor of Ridgeway entered the Ashton Court archive at that point and is mentioned in an eighteenth-century description of the Smyth properties east of Bristol, now to be found in the BRO with other papers relating to the Smyths’ manors.5

MS BRO AC/M/17/1 has been chosen as the master text because it is the fair copy. The text is centred on the page with broad margins to left and right from which it is delineated by vertical lines. The left margin is used for number of lives, heriots and other notes, the right for the rent. Textual variation with BRO AC/M/17/2 is noted in the footnotes. It is generally confined to spelling.

The text has been transcribed with original punctuation but with modern capitalisation of personal and place names. Features of the text such as use of the margins have been preserved by the arrangement of the text and the acreage totals appear on separate lines as they do in the manuscripts.

Spelling is variable even within individual documents; double ff at the beginning of words has been transcribed F. I and E are often interchangeable in the middle of words, thus “daye” and “daie” or I and Y thus “Phillips” and “Phillyps” “inclosid” and “inclosed”.

Relationship between the two surveys
In describing the same property at an interval of thirty years, the two surveys illustrate the change that had taken place over a generation in the mid sixteenth century. They follow a similar approach, describing the nature of the tenure (copy, indenture, jointure) and the extent and value of the property. Unlike the survey of Barton Regis, there is little mention in either survey of buildings associated with the holdings, but Smyth has an eye for detail, recording heriots (death duties), repair clauses associated with the leases and the location of the various plots of land in relation to others’ holdings. The surveys are ordered in different ways: Smyth moves methodically from the area close to the city in an outward direction, as if he were journeying from Lawford’s gate through Easton and Stapleton to Frampton Cotterell and Mangotsfield. The Seymour’s surveyors, John Berwick and Richard Pheilips, on the other hand, start in Frampton Cotterell, return to Easton and the city boundary and then go to Stapleton and Downend.

Some tenancies remained unchanged: John Bate retained the holding he originally took in 1523 and renewed in 1536 [RGL1, RGS6] and Sibyl Fawcett had succeeded her husband in the Pennywell property [RGL3, RGS1], but while Bate’s rent had increased by sixpence to 8s, the Fawcett holding continued to pay 14s. Other holdings had been granted to new tenants; the Kemys holding at Barry’s style and Gannt’s mede had passed to William Clement [RGL2, RGS5], while the sixty year lease on property at Lawford’s gate granted to John Style in 1514 had been reassigned twice and during that time there had been development from void ground and a garden to a building and two shops [RGL4, RGS2]. A key change too is the disappearance of the Abbot of Tewkesbury’s interest in the property, which in the Seymours’ time had taken the form of an annual chief rent of 14s.

In 1539 a cottage, its associated pasture and an acre in the king’s marsh, known as Seymours’ acre, were detached from the lands of Margaret Hiett and granted to Rafe Ellis in recognition of his service as the Seymours’ collector in the locality and would descend to his daughter, Ellen and her husband, Henry Myller [RGS7]. The sale in 1540 seems however to have been made with the rest of Margaret Hiett’s jointure or dower lands intact, so the opportunities for the new owners of Ridgeway, the White family, would have been limited until her death, the date of which is unknown. It may not have occurred until the early 1550s, however, for it was not until April 1552 that John White, son of the purchaser, Henry White, was finally able to lease the “capital messuage” of Ridgeway to Nicholas Browne. We can deduce that the property that was then leased must have amounted to at least 40 acres, since the Longleat survey describes an estate of more than 160 acres of arable, pasture and meadow land, while the Smyth survey of 1569 accounts for only 122 acres in total.

Further change took place in 1556 when White let 50.5 acres for sixty years to William Arondell, a gentleman [RGS8]. Coincidence of place names suggests that this holding must have contained some of the property in “utter ruen and decay” that the Longleat survey shows in the hands of Richard Browne [RGL9]. In November 1552 the holdings of Thomas Hoper and John Clement had been brought together to create a more substantial holding of 18 acres of arable for William Clement and in 1559 Clement was allowed to take out a copyhold on four acres of mead and pasture that would complement his arable. By 1559 however White was dead and it must have been his heirs or executors who rented a holding of 11.25 acres to Agnes, the wife of Gyles White, John White’s cousin and the joint executor of his will.

In the interval between the two surveys then, while the number of holdings had not decreased significantly, the nature of tenancies was changing. The Seymour survey shows ten tenancies, five of which were held without copy, and four of those five tenancies were subsequently granted for three lives. It also shows two holdings by indenture or agreement. By 1569 there were eight holdings five of which were held by indenture and there are two instances of property holders subcontracting their holding to others.

V DEPOSITIONS TAKEN BEFORE JOHN BIRCH, BARON OF THE EXCHEQUER CONCERNING BARTON REGIS WOODS
Depositions taken before John Birch, Baron of the Exchequer concerning Barton Regis Woods 1569

Description of the manuscript
The text presented here is recorded in a paper dossier (approximately 215 mm × 320 mm) and accompanying sheet of parchment, (approximately 335 mm × 480 mm) now preserved in the National Archives (MS TNA E 133/1/87). The dossier is made up of seven sheets folded in half to make 14 leaves. The front of the resulting booklet is left blank as a cover, and text begins on leaf 2 which is marked 1. The leaves are numbered 1–6. Thereafter they are not numbered and the final two leaves are unused. The text is written in one hand with some annotations in other hands. All pages of the text are signed by John Birch, the baron of the Exchequer before whom the case was heard, and the first leaf is annotated “William Warde, Richard Wood and others on behalf of Thomas Chester for Barton Regis woods”. The accompanying sheet of parchment is attached to the back of the paper dossier and contains a series of questions or interrogatories, written without margins in sections corresponding to the questions. The parchment is endorsed “Irr[otulatur] in memoranda scaccarii de anno xvo regine Elizabethe finenti videlicet inter recorda de termino octaue Michaelis rotulo ex parte remembrancii eiusdem regine. Civitas Bristoll’ Glouc’ deposit’ ex parte Thome Chester”.1 Also endorsed “deposicions of Wylliam Warde, Wylliam Popley & others” “Depositions of anno xijmo and xiiijmo Reginae Elizabeth”.

History and context of the manuscript
When Maurice Dennys sold the manor of Barton Regis to Thomas Chester in 1564 a division was made of the woodland which had been associated with the king’s manor of Barton Regis.2 The landholdings were already complex; the various holders of the manor of Barton Regis had made grants from its resources and neighbouring manors such as Bitton had claims over the woods. By the mid sixteenth century crown officials were anxious to reclaim the crown’s jurisdiction over the woods of the manor by asserting them to be forest. An action was therefore brought in the Court of the Exchequer in 1569.3

Although the Exchequer was the main financial department of government, a court was associated with it, the Exchequer of Pleas, which dealt with disputes arising from collecting royal revenue, and by the mid-sixteenth century, an equity jurisdiction

1 Latin: Enrolled among the Exchequer statements for the end of the fifteenth year of Queen Elizabeth, that is among records in the roll ending with Michaelmas eve on the part of the same Queen’s Remembrancer. City of Bristol, Gloucestershire, depositions on behalf of Thomas Chester. I am grateful to Professor David Crouch for his advice in the transcription of this endorsement.
2 GRO D2700/NR1/2 describes the sale to Thomas Chester on 2 May 1564.

was also developing under the King’s or at this time the Queen’s Remembrancer. Where the loss of royal rights was suspected, a bill of complaint set out the case and defendants had the right of reply, a so-called answer. In the case of Barton woods the plaintiff was Gilbert Gerrard, the attorney general on behalf of the queen, Elizabeth I, and the defendant Thomas Chester. This process might go through several phases known as pleadings, and then the court commissioned an examination of witnesses. It is the statements, or depositions, of those witnesses in response to certain specified questions that are presented here. The outcome of the case is not known, but Chester seems to have retained rights over the woodlands and mineral rights, implying that it was unsuccessful.

Birch or Byrche was not a well known legal figure of the sixteenth century and has been confused with other lawyers of the same name; TNA holds only one other pleading held before him, the depositions concerning Thomas Howard, duke of Norfolk when Birch sat with James Lorde, another baron of the Exchequer. He was born around 1515, entered Gray’s Inn, where he was reader in 1558 and 1560, and he sat as a baron of the Exchequer for eighteen years from 9 May 1564. He died in 1581 at the age of 66 and was buried in the old church of St Giles in the Fields, where his obituary said he had one son and two daughters by his wife Elizabeth Stydfolke.

The depositions have been transcribed with contractions and abbreviations expanded where this could be done safely. Punctuation has not been modernised, except where confusion would follow without it. Oblique signs [/], which appear throughout the text, often where modern practice would require a full stop, have been transcribed. Capitalisation follows modern conventions. Spelling is erratic -“said/saide”, “manor/mannor”, the latter with a superscript convention sometimes and not on other occasions. No attempt has been made to standardise and the text has been transcribed as it appears. There is much deletion throughout it. Sometimes it is apparent that this was the result of correcting scribal error. On other occasions it appears that the deponent has provided additional information or has challenged the form of words in which his evidence was recorded.

Warren, John, c. 1519–1577\(^\text{135}\) [D5] [E27 1544] [R26–28] [R72] [R152] [RGS4]
For his life the reversion of William Warren’s cottage [E26] [R72]; acted as an attorney for Matthew Smyth; probably identical with John Warren, inn keeper of the city of Bristol, born c. 1519, who gave a deposition in the case concerning Barton Regis woods, 1569 and had been warder to Sir Maurice Dennys. John Warren, husband of Elizabeth, the widow of William Clement, brought an action for debt against the proctors of St Philips in 1570, claiming a debt that had been owed to Elizabeth’s first husband. A silver chalice was assigned to cover the cost of the debt.\(^\text{136}\) In 1575 Matthew Smyth leased him for 21 years a moiety of 24 acres of land in several places in Barton hundred, three quarters of a close of pasture on Barrowe Hill and of 2 acres of Gauntes Meade and of 1 acre of arable in Pryorsfield “if Isabell wife of John Warren shall live long”. John and Isabell already held for term of her life the other moiety and fourth part.\(^\text{137}\)

Warwick, earl of [D6.7]
In the early sixteenth-century there were residents of more than seventy years of age, who recollected the earl of Warwick’s tenure of the manor of Barton Regis. They were probably thinking of Richard Neville, earl of Warwick, “the Kingmaker” (died 1471). Warwick had been granted the title in 1449 in right of his wife, Anne Beaufort, sister of the duke of Warwick and descendant of the Despenser earls of Gloucester. Although the countess of Warwick survived her husband until 1492 and her grandson, Edward (1475–99) also used the title, the lands were in royal custody from 1478.139

We[i]r, Jorg [R80]

Wykes, Robert (born 1528) [D1.3] [D2.3] [D3.3] [D4.3] [D5.3] [D6.3] [D6.7]
The Mr Wykes, mentioned in the Barton Regis woods case 1569, was probably Robert, son of John Wykes,¹⁴⁵ son of Nicholas Wykes, Member of Parliament, of Dodington. The family, which is also known as the Weeks family, had accumulated interests in Gloucestershire and Somerset in the sixteenth century and had married into the Poyntz family. Robert bought Siston in 1568/9.¹⁴⁶

Mentioned as a participant in the survey of Barton woods; wife Elizabeth, son John; two tenancies were held by copy for his life only, [S15] and [E35].

Sherles
This place name occurs from the middle ages and is repeated in deeds until the nineteenth century. If the evidence of the 1609 map of Kingswood is reliable, Sharles Lees lay on the eastern bank in a loop of the River Frome and the place-name Sharls appears in the eighteenth century, close to the river. 56 This would imply that the messuage lay on the ridge of high land in the vicinity of modern St Mark’s Road and may have been the so-called manor house in Belmont Street, Easton. 57
