What information should be included on this form?

You should include:

- Notification of a medical condition or disability.
- Any form of medical treatment or supervision you are receiving.
- Any condition that could affect your fitness to undertake practical work or field work, or may present a risk to yourself or others.
- Details of all special arrangements you received for your GCSE or A-levels or any other recent examinations (e.g. extra time in exams).

What special arrangements can be requested?

The University will make reasonable adjustment to arrangements for teaching and assessment where, because of a disability or health condition, the University considers that the standard arrangements would place a student at a disadvantage.

Common requests include, but are not limited to:

- Extra time in examinations. The usual adjustment for students with dyslexia is 15 minutes per hour additional time (ie 25% extra time).
- Use of a computer in examinations. When computers are provided there is no access to material stored as memory and, unless there is specific supporting evidence, no access to spell checker or related software.
- Use of coloured overlay / printed documents provided on coloured paper. Please specify the specific shade(s) requested.

For special arrangements in examinations, you must also make a formal application following University procedures once you arrive at University.

What evidence is required?

If you are not asking for any special arrangements then you do not need to supply evidence.

If you would like to be considered for special arrangements, one of the following is normally required:

- Dyslexia report. A report from an Educational Psychologist, secondary school or College, which must have been produced for your GCSE or A-levels or similar exams. You should submit the full report, not an extract.
- Evidence from your own GP or a doctor in the University’s Student Health Centre.
- Report from a hospital where you are being treated.
- Report from a psychiatric nurse or other mental health professional.
- A Disability Support Summary prepared by the University’s Disability Services *

Please note we do not accept a DSA (Disabled Students Allowance) report as evidence in support of special arrangements.

* The University’s Disability Services (http://www.bristol.ac.uk/disability-services), provides a range of services to students. We strongly recommend that you contact this service as soon as possible if you need, or think you may need, advice or a Disability Support Summary. A Disability Support Summary is based on supporting evidence, discussion with you (the student) and, where appropriate, a discussion with your school. You do not need to wait until you arrive at University to contact Disability Services.
