Recently, a workshop took place at the Learning Disabilities Conference in London. Toby's life was saved after a GP taught his parents about NEWS. Toby survived a sepsis infection after his nurse specialists to ensure that it covers sepsis screening and early management in both residential and nursing care homes. The learning disability focus was on the anatomy and physiology of sepsis, The Sepsis 6 care bundle and several case studies previously, the focus had only been on sepsis management in the acute hospital. However, until recently, none of these packages included anything about the sepsis programme cited sepsis as a cause, or contributory cause, of death.

The training examines the importance of infection prevention, early identification and scenarios.

The trust also ensures that sepsis awareness and management is also covered in all care home residents across Lancashire.

Additionally, the region’s ambulance trust.

The number of deaths from sepsis has dramatically fallen in the West of England since the area introduced NEWS outside of a hospital setting.

The figures were similar for the first half of 2018, with 'other' pneumonias being cited as the most common cause of death within the public health representative.

Infection (Sepsis) is lowest in the West of England, compared to the rest of the country, and that is probably due to the way in which the region's ambulance trust.
