Why study religion and theology at Bristol?

Our Single and Joint Honours degrees and MArts Religion and Theology involve studying some of the world’s major religions – Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Chinese religions, Hinduism and Buddhism – and their foundational texts. We are a friendly department with eight permanent staff engaged in teaching and research, ranked fifth out of 33 departments in the UK for our research according to new analysis of the Research Excellence Framework (REF) 2014
by the Times Higher Education Supplement.

Our courses are modular and allow you the flexibility to either concentrate on certain areas
or choose units from many areas of study.
Whichever path you follow, you will find that the department has a tradition of intellectual innovation, using a range of archaeological, historical, linguistic, philosophical and theological approaches. The only commitment asked of you is an academic one: belief in the importance of the subject and a willingness to pursue it seriously.

Besides the core focus on religion and theology, you will also have the opportunity to textualise your studies by taking options beyond your department. You may choose to take units in related or broader subject areas or in a foreign language. You will also take part in the Bristol Futures programme, which builds knowledge and experience in the fields of innovation and enterprise, global citizenship and sustainable development.

You may also choose to spend one semester
(for BA courses) or one year (for the MArts course) living and studying abroad, an experience which broadens horizons and which employers value highly.

Become an arts student at Bristol and you will be joining a diverse group of staff, students and subjects
united by a fascination in exploring how humans express their experiences. From 2018 we are offering you even greater opportunities to explore subjects beyond your core studies and an average of ten or more contact hours per week. Through our innovative curriculum we ensure you develop the key skills and attributes employers seek while receiving a first-class education.
The various religious traditions of the world represent significant expressions of cultural values and ideas about the meaning of life and death. It is not possible to have a mature understanding of the past and present state of the world without some knowledge of these traditions. Our courses introduce you to the history, practices and ideas of some of the world’s principal living religions, focusing in particular on Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism and Chinese traditions, as well as the philosophy of religion.

Our welcoming classroom environment enables you to interact closely with lecturers as you explore key issues of world religions and learn how leading scholars approach the subject. You may also choose to study a language: Chinese, Greek, Japanese, Latin or Sanskrit. By looking at sacred texts, ritual, ethics, sexuality, politics, philosophy, history and law, you will consider how religion informs and has informed the ways that millions of people, both individually and collectively, live their lives, finding meaning and purpose in the process.

What will you study?

In the first and second years, you will take a symposium in religion and theology, (a small discussion group, which considers key questions in the academic investigation of religion). These symposium – Approaches to the Study of Religion and Issues in the Study of Religion – run in alternate years.

First years also take The Living Religions, which introduces major world faiths, and choose three other units from a diverse range, such as:
- Clash of Religion: Christianity and Islam
- Philosophy of Religion
- Divine Love and Hinduism
- language units.

In addition to the symposium, second years also take four optional units, for example:
- Early and Pre-modern Christianity
- Philosophy of Religion
- Divine Love in Hinduism
- introductory language units.

You may also have the option of spending a semester at one of our overseas exchange partners.

If you are studying for the BA course, in your third year you will work one-to-one with a member of staff on either a 12,000-word dissertation or a dissertation with fieldwork (comprising an 8000-word dissertation and a 4000-word portfolio). If you choose the fieldwork option you will attend workshops in fieldwork skills. You will also take four optional units, for example:
- Sex, Marriage and Deviance in the Early Modern Era
- Atheism
- Medieval Mystics.

MArts students have a rare opportunity to study at home and abroad. You will spend a year at one of our world-renowned partner institutions in Asia, Australia, Canada, the USA or Continental Europe.

In your final year you will study comparative religions and take optional units that allow you to focus on a particular religion or pursue broader themes. You will also compose a dissertation on a bespoke topic.

Our teaching

Our teaching and learning deliver an education at the forefront of the subject, along with the acquisition of the key skills and attributes sought by employers for a very wide range of careers. Our diverse range of assessments ensure that you gain a thorough training in advanced research, source analysis and sharing your findings in a number of ways.

We will ensure that you graduate with experience in formal writing, presentation skills and in using digital formats and other media to present knowledge, ideas and arguments. You will be experienced in working individually and in groups, and in making connections with and communicating to audiences beyond the University.

‘The Department of Religion and Theology is unparalleled in the UK for the diversity of courses it offers across the entire religious spectrum. Academic staff are experts in their focus areas and produce exciting, cutting-edge and peer-respected work through a variety of prestigious journals and book publishers.’

Marek (BA Religion and Theology 2013)
The skills that arts students traditionally bring to the workplace are now, more than ever, valued in every part of the employment market. Our students go on to succeed in careers as diverse as the subjects they study – education, the charity sector, law, accountancy, theatre, museums, publishing, journalism, commerce, tech start-ups, politics and international relations, to name just a few. Arts graduates also go on to work in sectors perhaps not immediately associated with arts disciplines, such as engineering and IT.

To ensure arts graduates continue to be appealing to employers, the Bristol Skills Framework enables students to recognise their development in areas such as academic writing, problem solving, group work and individual and group presentation. We will equip you with the tools to market your skills, your achievement and your potential in whatever career path you choose to pursue after you graduate.

Employers place great value on the transferable skills that religion and theology graduates offer. These include the ability to think critically, write fluently, and appreciate ideas and opinions different to their own. Recent graduates have entered varied fields, such as teaching, international development, law, social work and business.

Alternatively, there is the possibility of postgraduate study on our full-time (one year) and part-time (two years) MA and MPhil programmes. Research work at PhD level can also be undertaken. The department also hosts two highly active research centres: the Centre for Buddhist Studies and the Centre for Christianity and Culture.

To Bristol does not require you to be religious; in fact, staff and students in the department are rather diverse in that regard. Whether you have a religious commitment or not, you are very welcome. What is expected of applicants is a genuine fascination with the religious ideas of humanity and their role in framing people’s lives, past and present, including religious literature, art, music, politics, philosophy and ethics.

If you are applying, you should familiarise yourself with the kinds of issues studied in religion and theology at university level and show this in your application. If some time has elapsed since you gained relevant qualifications (eg A-levels), we may invite you to interview.
