From our new GP lead for the Swindon Academy—Lindsay O'Kelly

I have recently been appointed as the new GP undergraduate lead for the Swindon Academy. I trained at Southampton and was a GP principal both there and in Faringdon (Oxfordshire). My longstanding interest in Medical education developed through a 2 year teaching fellowship at the University of Michigan (USA), where I became particularly interested in the support and training available for GP tutors in the community. On returning to England I have continued to work as a GP and over the past 12 years have been involved in teaching with Oxford University through a further fellowship and roles in tutor support and curriculum development. More recently I have been working as a salaried GP in Swindon and I continue to teach on the communication skills course in Oxford.

I am extremely enthusiastic about undergraduate education and the role that GPs play in this and am very much looking forward to working with the GP tutors in the Swindon area.
