

Multiculturalism, Muslims and Citizenship

A European Approach

Edited by Tariq Modood, Bristol University, UK,
Anna Triandafyllidou, ELIAMEP, Athens and
Ricard Zapata-Barrero, Universitat Pompeu Fabra, Spain

Multiculturalism, Muslims and Citizenship investigates the European dimension of multiculturalism and immigration. The book argues that the political theory discourse of multiculturalism and resulting policies assume a North American, rather than the European, experience. Much of the theoretical debate up to now understates the normative power of majority/state nationality, and overlooks the diverse societal and political contexts that may condition multicultural debates in different countries. Most seriously, such debate misses out the central feature of the multicultural challenge in Western Europe today: the assertion of religious-communal, especially Muslim, identities in polities whose self image is secular. This book argues, therefore, that a European theory must focus on different normative and political dilemmas than a North American one and must interrogate the claims for and against secularism.

Multiculturalism, Muslims and Citizenship is interdisciplinary in scope (combining sociological, political science and discourse analytical themes) and presents a fresh and unique perspective on multiculturalism and citizenship in Western Europe today. It offers a theoretical framework within which are situated a comparative and coherent series of national case studies by a diverse range of leading scholars in the field.

This is essential reading for advanced undergraduates, researchers and policy makers interested in immigration, multiculturalism, European integration, Islamic studies and ethnicities.
