Spanish, Portuguese and Catalan

Undergraduate study
Why study Spanish, Portuguese and Catalan at Bristol?

After English, Spanish is the world’s most widely spoken European language and is the second language of the USA. Portuguese is the world’s seventh most widely spoken language, used in Portugal, Brazil, five African countries and parts of Asia. Since it is so important, yet so rarely studied, knowledge of Portuguese is a very marketable skill. Catalan is also taught in Bristol and is becoming increasingly important in Spanish culture and politics.

Our teaching focuses on many aspects of the history, literature and culture of Iberia and Latin America, from medieval times to the present day.

The department enjoys a strong reputation for its teaching and research in Hispanic, Latin American, Portuguese and Catalan cultures, and has a cosmopolitan and student-focused atmosphere. Staff research and teaching specialisms range from Spanish and Portuguese literature and history to the Colombian Wars of Independence and the cultures of the indigenous people of Latin America. Regular Hispanic, Portuguese and Latin-American cultural events are organised by both staff and students, including an annual Luso-Hispanic Cultural Week.

Modern languages students at Bristol benefit from a state-of-the-art multimedia centre, which provides access to over 2,000 film titles, foreign satellite channels, magazines and newspapers as well as equipment for oral practice, presentations and projects.

‘Now more than ever, the UK needs to reach out and listen to the wider world. An in-depth knowledge of modern languages, their cultures and societies is essential for success in a global context. At Bristol we offer our students a wide range of language combinations taught by expert teachers and world-leading researchers.’

Professor Susan Harrow, Head of the School of Modern Languages
What will you study?

All of our Single and Joint Honours degrees are available to complete or near beginners, for whom a tailor-made intensive language course is offered in the first stages of the course. Hispanic Studies comprises Spanish, Portuguese and Catalan (from the second year). All courses are centred on the study of the relevant language(s), complemented by options in the history, literature and cultures of Iberia and Latin America. If you enter with an A-level you will follow your own advanced language course, plus additional cultural units to consolidate and extend your experience.

In the first year you will receive an introduction to Hispanic and Latin American Studies and/or Portuguese and Lusophone Studies, taught through lectures by teams of specialist academic staff. These units also focus on the development of key skills for progression through the degree course: you will improve your language skills through reading modern representative texts and viewing films, while getting a taste of the cultural diversity of the relevant countries.

In years two and four you choose from a wide range of optional units covering the languages, literature, history, politics and culture of the Spanish- and/or Portuguese-speaking world. Examples of units offered previously include:

Spanish units
- From Frontiers to Football: Nations in Latin America;
- Republic, War and Dictatorship in Spain, 1931-1982;
- Women’s Writing in Post-war Spain;
- The Cuban Revolution in the World: Culture and Politics of Internationalism;
- Hispanic Sociolinguistics;
- Arts of Unreason;
- Themes in Latin American Film: Social Changes and Challenges.

Portuguese units
- Body/Image: Gender and Corporeality in the Lusophone World;
- Transnational Narratives in Contemporary Brazilian Culture;
- Audio-visual Translation.

You may also take interdisciplinary units in the School of Modern Languages, such as: World Cinema; Translation as Professional Practice; Linguistics; The Radical Right; Communism in Europe. In the final year you may also choose to write a dissertation exploring a topic of your choice in detail.

Your timetable, teaching and modes of learning will vary according to the year of study, but typically you will experience a mixture of lectures, seminars and various types of language classes (written, oral/aural and grammar) throughout your course. Independent study and preparation will occupy a considerable part of your timetable in addition to scheduled classes.

All courses last four years and include a period of residence abroad in at least one appropriate country during the third year.

Units are assessed by a combination of coursework, examinations and seminar presentations. The ratio between each type of assessment depends upon which optional units are chosen.

Year abroad
You may spend your year abroad working or volunteering, giving you valuable professional experience, or studying at one of our partner universities. We currently have exchange agreements with universities in Spain or Portugal and several universities in Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Colombia and elsewhere in Latin America.

The Global Opportunities office will help you to arrange study or work placements and assist with associated administration.

If you study two languages, you will divide your year abroad equally between countries where they are spoken. Students on the Hispanic Studies course will spend part of the year in Catalonia in order to experience both Spanish and Catalan. Your year abroad will provide you with a highly attractive skill set for employers.
In addition to linguistic aptitude, modern languages graduates develop employability skills, including:

- written and oral communication skills;
- information gathering and analysis;
- time management skills;
- self-confidence and independence;
- international outlook and cultural awareness;
- presentation skills.

Many of our students use their languages after graduation and a high proportion find employment in which their languages are advantageous. Our graduates enter a wide variety of careers, including banking, law, marketing, the media, accountancy, tourism and the civil service.

Some go on to further study or training in programmes such as international relations and development, teaching and translation. Some recent graduates now work for international institutions including the United Nations and the Organisation of American States.

The Bristol Skills Framework enables our students to recognise their development in academic writing, problem solving, group work and individual and group presentations. We will equip you with the tools to market your skills, your achievement and your potential in whatever career path you choose to pursue after you graduate.

The University of Bristol has one of the best employment records in the UK. We are rated sixth in the UK in the QS Graduate Employability Rankings 2018 and are the fourth most targeted university by top UK graduate employers (High Fliers Research 2018).

"Studying languages has proved indispensable to getting my first graduate job. I really couldn’t imagine applying for a job role where foreign languages aren’t utilised or considered an asset."
